EXCURSION TRAIN MEETS A FREIGHT HEAD ON

DEAD NUMBER TWENTY-FIVE

MANY INJURED AND OTHER DEATHS EXPECTED.

SCENE OF WRECK APPALLING

Belated Passenger Train on Boston & Maine Road, Crowded With Sleeping Excursionists, Meets Fast Freight Which Had Disobeyed Orders.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Sept. 15.—Twenty-five excursionists returning from Canada met death, and many others were injured about daylight today in a fearful head-on collision on the Concord division of the Boston and Maine railroad about four miles west of Canaan station. The badly injured numbered nearly 30, some of whom it is feared may not recover.

At noon 25 bodies had been taken from the wreck.

A train of four cars well filled with tired, sleeping excursionists, nearly all of whom had been spending the day at the fair at Sherbrooke, Quebec, 150 miles over the Canadian border to the north, had rounded a curve at a lively speed when the headlight of a freight locomotive flashed before the eyes of the engineer. In another instant there was a crash and both engines were lying together a mass of wreckage, in the ditch beside the track.

List of Dead.

Those identified up to 6 o'clock tonight were as follows:

TIMOTHY SHAUGHNESSY, Castle Bar, Que.
MRS SHAUGHNESSY.
MISS ANNIE ST. PIERRE, Isle Verte, Que.
FRED M. PHELPS, Gohiltree, Texas.
MRS. A. E. WARREN, Haverhill, N. H.
MRS. F. C. BLAKE, South Corinth, Vt.
MRS. MARGARET LARGY, Manchester, N. H.
MISS BARRETT, Manchester.
MRS. PHILLIP GAGNON, Sherbrooke.
MISS ALVINA GIRON, Nassau.
MRS. WEBSTER, a dressmaker living in Massachusetts.
J. L. CONGROT, Somerville, Mass.
INFANT CHILD, of Irving Gifford, Concord.
MRS. E. L. BRIGGS, West Canaan, N. H.
JOHN G. DUNCAN, Bethel, Vt.

The unidentified include a boy four years old, a man 40 years, a woman of 20 years, a man of 35, a man of 55 years, and four others.

Twenty-two of the bodies were removed to Concord during the day.

Some of Injured.

The most seriously injured who were taken to the Margaret Hitchcock hospital at Hanover, N. H., include:

Unknown boy, both legs broken, arm torn out and head injured, dying.

—— Saunders, Nassau, N. H., legs and arms injured.

Mrs. S. Saunders, Nassau, head and back injured.

Mrs. C. N. Saunders, Nassau, wounded on head.

Miss D. Saunders, Nassau, internal injury.

Miss C. Saunders, Nassau, contusions on face.

Frederick Saunders, Nassau, shoulders injured.

Mrs. Hester Saunders, Brocton, Mass., head and back injured.

Charles St. Pierre, Isle Verte, Que., internal injuries.

Arthur Jacques, Millbury, internal injuries.

E. A. Batchelder, Somerville, ankle broken.

Philip Gagnon, Sherbrooke, internal injuries.

John Barrett, Manchester, head and breast injured.

Miss Abbie Jansen, Nassau, broken frontal bone.

Scores Are Mangled.

The baggage car next to the passenger locomotive had been driven back into the passenger coach, telescoping it and crushing the lives out of half a carload of people. At the same time nearly everyone else in that car was injured. A few escaped, but those who were in the sleeper in the rear were saved from death by the more sturdy qualities of their car.

The accident occurred at 4:24 a. m., just as the dawn was showing in the east. The moment after it happened train hands who had escaped injury, and passengers in the sleeping car were looking upon one of the worst wrecks ever seen in New Hampshire. The locomotives lay in a tangled pile. The baggage car, partly derailed, was held nearly upright by the wreckage of the demolished day coach, one side of which had been completely ripped off, while the remainder was ground to splinters by the force of the shock. A smoker behind the day coach stood on the rails with ends demolished and windows broken. The sleeper was practically undamaged.

In the debris of the passenger coach lay more dead and injured than could be estimated at this moment.

PREPARE TO DEFEND CUP

New York Yacht Club Will Have Six Boats to Test.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—Plans are well under way for yachts to defend the America's cup. Four syndicates have been formed in the New York Yacht club, it is said, to build yachts to contest for the honor of defending the cup, and it is believed that at least six boats will take part in the elimination trials. Sir Thomas Lipton has waited until almost the last moment to make his challenge, but the members of the New York Yacht club have their plans well in hand. Unless there are some unexpected conditions in the challenge, there is little doubt that it will be accepted.

WILL COMBAT STRIKERS

FIVE RAILWAYS TO FIGHT BOILERMAKERS.

Strike Is General, but Officials of Roads Claim That Men Are Not United.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 15.—Operating officials of the five railways involved in the strike of boilermakers, the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Chicago Great Western, the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha and the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie, today formed an organization to meet strike conditions. The organization will at once proceed to fill the places vacated by strikers.

Reports received from shop points indicate that the strike is general, though railway officials say there is some wavering in the ranks of the strikers at Council Bluffs. The Great Northern claims that some of its men have already returned to work, and that reports from the west indicate that some of the boilermakers believe the compromise offer of the roads should have been accepted. On the Great Western 360 machinists are out, demanding uniform wages with the boilermakers.

The railway managers say that a total of 1,192 men are out on the five roads affected, but that the strike has caused no inconvenience in the operation of trains.

JAPS DESIRE CONCORD

REGRET CANADA SHOULD MOB IMMIGRANTS.

Magnitude of the Affair at once and Settlement Arranged on Permanent Basis.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Sept. 15.—A cablegram from Tokio to Japanese Consul General Nosse, received today, referring to the oriental riots at Vancouver, says:

"The feeling, in spite of the character of the disturbance being much graver than that of San Francisco, is favorable to Canada. While greatly regretting that this deplorable incident should occur within a dominion of the British empire, whose ally Japan is, the tone of the press is calm and the public shows no excitement. All are depending upon the justice, friendship and fair play of the people of Canada, fully expecting that measures will be taken to protect Japanese lives and property."

Mr. Nosse does not say who is the author of the cable. Mr. Ishii, Japan's representative who will investigate the affair, arrived in Ottawa today. He will meet Premier Laurier and other Dominion officials at the home of Mr. Nosse on Tuesday evening. It is understood that W. D. Scott, Dominion superintendent of immigration, who is now on his way to Vancouver, will recommend that the immigration regulations be amended to require each entrant to possess a sum of money, as is required for entrance to the United States.

The mayor of Vancouver telegraphs the premier that the newly arrived orientals are not paupers. He asks permission to house them in government property because there are not sufficient dwellings available in Vancouver.

IS MURDERED BY MEXICANS

George Rose and Wife Shot by Bandits at Guanajuato—Mrs. Rose Will Probably Recover.

LAPORTE, Ind., Sept. 15.—A telegram received today from W. Dwight Furness of Furnessville, Ind., United States consul at Guanajuato, Mexico, tells of the murder there by Mexican bandits of George Rose, an American, and the injury of his wife.

The murdered man was a son of W. A. D. Rose of Benton Harbor, Mich., and was 34 years old. He was graduated from the Michigan Agricultural college in 1896, and in 1900 was married to Miss Winifred McGrath of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mrs. Rose was also shot, but it is believed that she will recover.

FOOT BRIDGE GIVES WAY

Scores of Persons Get Ducking in River Beneath.

FINDLAY, O., Sept. 15.—Four people were seriously injured and 100 others were submerged in the Blanchard river late this afternoon while on their way home from a ball game as a result of the breaking down of the Spindle street suspension foot bridge in this city. The giving way of the bridge was caused by the breaking of a cable that supported one of the sides, supposedly by the excessive weight that was on it at the time.

CONFIDENCE IS NOW RESTORED

ALL DANGER OF FINANCIAL PANIC IS PASSED.

GOOD CROPS RENEW STABILITY

PLENTY OF CASH FOR NEW YORK AND U. P. BONDS.

MUCH PRODUCE FOR EXPORT

Cotton and Grain Crops Heavier Than Anticipated and Country Is Recovering From Shock Caused by Curtailment of Copper Production.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—A number of distinctly conflicting influences in the financial situation made their effect felt in the securities markets last week, the action of the market reflecting the dominance first on one side and then on another. The disturbing effect of the critical condition of the copper trade and the candid acknowledgement by officials high in authority upset the market and overthrew the benefits which had begun to be felt from the clearing money outlook, the success of the New York city bond sale, and the shaping of the final yield of the country's great staple crops.

Copper Center of Interest.

The condition of the copper trade was frankly termed utterly demoralized. The demand for copper is said to be completely paralyzed with no point of stability in sight at which reawakened buying may arrest the declining tendency and with huge stocks of refined copper already accumulated by the great producers. The financial burden of holding these vast accumulations is aggravated by the closeness of the money market and credence is given to reports that banks were unwilling to extend loans against copper and were in fact recalling them.

Reduction Causes Shock.

The indicated intention to cut down production, therefore seemed to offer no occasion for surprise but came as a shock to sentiment nevertheless. The relaxation which has come to the money markets and which has been pronounced in all the great centers, was accepted as a reliable indication that one great factor in the strain had turned the corner to improvement. The success of the New York city bond issue also was accepted as pointing definitely to a better investment situation.

Tranquility Restored.

The tranquility with which the money market met the heavy requirement of the payment for the New York bonds and Union Pacific convertible bonds, on which an installment of over $30,000,000 fell due on the same day, was reassuring over the condition of the money market. The redeposit of the proceeds of the bond sales, further deposits of government funds by the banks, the redemption of the Japanese six per cent bonds, of which the American holdings proved to be unexpectedly large, and the making of exchange by the outward flood of merchandise exports, are looked to for further replenishment of supplies in the money market.

Anxiety Has Subsided.

Solicitude over the money market has largely subsided in consequence of these developments. The government crop report in spite of the deterioration shown in the grain crops, leaves a feeling of confidence that a considerable surplus will be left available for export at profitable figures. The heavy ginning of cotton is evidence also of sufficient stocks of that important commodity to make its usual large showing in the country's export trade. Demand for older issues of bonds was light, but the outcome of the New York city bond issue did not induce any great drastic price readjustment.

TARKINGTON HANDS A BUNCH

Is Ashamed of Americans Who Sell Their Daughters to Harpies of Europe.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Booth Tarkington the author-dramatist, who has just returned from Europe, in an interview today discussed the snares set for Americans by titled Europeans.

"I am ashamed of my fellow Americans," said Mr. Tarkington. "I speak of that class with more money than good sense, that makes hysterical attempts to misally its daughters to the morally strabismic and financially decrepit titular excrescences of the old world. The fate of pure-minded American girls intrusted to the keeping of some of the male harpies one finds in capitals of Europe is enough to shock the hardened senses of even an American king of finance."

CROWDS FOR SIBERIA

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 15.—A telegram received here from Riazan says that 54,000 emigrants have passed through there since the beginning of the year bound for Siberia.

REMEMBER ANTIETAM DAY

Roosevelt Sends Message of Congratulation to Catholics.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—In response to an invitation by the Catholic War Veterans Benevolent and Memorial legion to attend the celebration of Antietam day September 17, of it [illegible] requiem mass at the procathedral in Brooklyn, President Roosevelt has sent a letter to J. D. McNeirney, president of the association, in which he says:

"Every good citizen must sympathize with your aims, and I extend to you my hearty good wishes [illegible] success."

CLAIM TAX IS UNLAWFUL

Initiative and Referendum Principle Is Unconstitutional, Says Telephone Company.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 15.—Suit recently instituted by the state of Oregon against the Pacific Telephone company to compel the company to pay a state tax of 2 per cent on its gross earnings for the year 1906 is resisted by the company in an answer filed yesterday, the grounds being that the initiative and referendum, by which means the tax law was put into existence, is unconstitutional.

The company contends, briefly, that under the initiative and referendum law the electors of the state are enabled to usurp the legislative functions of the state and national government, in direct violation of the federal and state constitutions, which provide that the congress and the legislature shall be the sole legislative bodies.

MOBS CRY FOR JUSTICE

PARISIANS ENRAGED AT CLEMENCY TO VIOLATOR.

Crimes Against Little Girls Have Become Frequent, and Populace Demands Blood.

PARIS, Sept. 15.—The increasing indignation of the masses over the escape from the guillotine of Soleillant, known as the "monstrous violator and murderer," whose sentence to death for the atrocious murder of a 12-year-old girl was commuted last week by President Fallieres to life imprisonment, was expressed today in a series of the most curious public demonstrations that have occurred in France in a long time. Many women participated. They were organized not so much against Soleillant as to express the voice of the populace against the wave of unspeakable crimes committed on little girls, which lately has increased to an alarming degree, and which, it is feared, the commutation of the sentence of Soleillant will only stimulate.

Several thousand persons were engaged in demonstrations at various points of the city and especially large was the crowd in the Place St. Ambroise, near which lived little Martha Erberding, the victim of Soleillant. The rage of the women of this district has been great since President Fallieres showed clemency to Soleillant. They assembled this afternoon with their husbands and others of their sympathizers and were augmented in numbers by crowds of curious persons. Their orderly cries for justice were quickly changed to cries of "Death to Soleillant" and "down with Fallieres." Soon the streets were choked by a vast mob and the police reserves were called out to disperse it. The parade, however, assembled again, and several of the more violent demonstrators were arrested.

Meantime other parades had been organized in different quarters of the city, one in the Place Vendome, at the ministry of justice. This was led by a woman with a babe on her shoulder.

The crowd shouted "Death to violators." At nightfall this parade was dispersed by the police, who feared that with darkness disorder would break out. Smaller processions traversed the grand boulevards of the city.

WILL TREK TO MEXICO

VOLIVA WILL LEAD FOLLOWERS TO NEW ZION.

Is Elected General Overseer for Life and Calls on People for $10,000.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—Wilbur Glenn Voliva was formally elected general overseer of the Christian Apostolic church in Zion for life, by the general ecclesiastical conference held in a tent at Zion City today. The vote of 1,256 was pronounced unanimous.

In his speech of acceptance Voliva announced that a mass meeting would be held tomorrow, at which time he would make known his plans regarding the pilgrimage to the ranch in Mexico containing 22,000 acres, where the new Zion City is to be founded. He further stated that he would have to have $10,000 within the next 10 days, and called upon his followers to contribute.

The faction in Zion City affairs headed by John A. Lewis, named by John Alexander Dowie in his will as his lawful successor, will hold a general conference next week. Numerically it is not so strong in Zion City as the one headed by Voliva, but it is said to have greater support from the affiliated churches throughout the world.

DIES OF WHITE PLAGUE

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 15.—Mrs. Jennie Nugan of Colon, Neb., 37 years of age, died here today at the home of her sister, Mrs. C. K. Bradenberg, of tuberculosis, leaving a husband and two sons, who reside in Nebraska. The remains will be sent to Colon for interment.

NO BLUE LAWS FOR MRS. BESANT

BROTHERHOOD OF HIGH AND LOW IS HER THEORY.

WILL HAVE NO MORAL CODE

NO SWORD FOR BACKSLIDERS AMONG THEOSOPHISTS.

UNITE SAINTS AND SINNERS

A Cast Iron Rule to Expel Undesirables Would Bring Society Below Level of Orthodox Religions, Says President of Religious Cult.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—Mrs. Annie Besant of Adyr, India, the recently elected world president of theosophical society, addressed the delegates to the twenty-first annual convention of the American section of that organization here today, declaring strongly against the adoption of a moral code, so-called, a question that has agitated theosophists in this country for some time past. The question was debated at some length, but no definite action was taken. Mrs. Besant declared in the commencement of her address that all theosophists are one in their eagerness to raise the moral tone of the society. Where the members of the society differ, she said, is on the question "Shall moral ideas be enforced by penalty or not?"

No Exclusion Rules.

"None of the great religions," said Mrs. Besant, "has a penal code enforcing its commandments by exclusion from its pale. On the contrary they regard it as a primary duty to try to improve their evil doers, not to cast them out. Some religions excommunicate on ceremonial grounds, but we may presume that the theosophical society does not wish to copy their example. Religions leave to the civil power the punishment of offenses and strive to reform and purify rather than expel. Shall the theosophical society descend below the level common to religious bodies and proclaim itself in need of the sword of acrimonial law.

"A penal code among us would be the genial of brotherhood. Spirituality proclaims the unity of all. Just in proportion as we are spiritual shall we feel our unity with saints and sinners alike. We are all eager to feel our unity with the gods, with the christs, with the saints but no such lop-sided unity is possible. Only those can be one with the highest who are also one with the lowest, by the one spirit that dwells in us all, our brothers' sins are our sins, our brothers' shame, our shame.

No Penal Code.

"If we make a rule expelling from the society our undesirable, we shall sink below the level of all great religious bodies, even below the level of ordinary scientific, philosophical and literary societies.

"For my own part I shall steadily resist any attempt to impose a penal code upon the society. I stand for the affirmation of lofty ideals of morality and for strenuous efforts to live up to them. I appeal to the unfolding dignity in man and not to the beggarly elements of coercive laws. I gladly affirm my brotherhood with the lowest, as I reverently hope to be accepted as brother of the highest."

A motion embodying a penal code was voted down by a large majority, and four members of the executive committee, all holding views in accord with those of Mrs. Besant, were elected.

The question of the adoption of a moral code is one that has agitated theosophists in this country for some time past. It was made an issue when a resolution specifying certain acts for which members could be expelled from the society was proposed by a minority element in the meeting. It was lost by a vote of four to one of the delegates.

The members of the executive committee named are:

A. P. Warrington, Norfolk, Va., Mrs. Mary Steinple, Los Angeles; J. H. Kairns, Washington, D. C., and F. J. Kuntz, Freeport, Ill. Weller Vanhook of Chicago was elected general secretary for the American branch.

LITTLE WAR WITH REBELS

Chinese Troops and Insurgents Have Stubborn Twelve-Hour Battle.

HONGKONG, Sept. 16.—A stubborn 12-hour engagement occurred yesterday between troops and insurgents at Lingsian City, in the prefecture of Yung Chow. The imperial reinforcements marched 60 miles from Kwangsi and relieved the city. The insurgents, who are moderately well armed, have severed telegraphic communication. It is reported that the leaders of the movement are emigrants who have returned from the Straits settlement and Annam, where they obtained their military stores. Gunboats are patrolling the coast to prevent smuggling.

EPIDEMIC IN RUSSIA

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 15.—Four fresh cases of cholera, of which three were fatal, have been reported from Moscow and that vicinity. The province of Viatka is declared to be infected with the disease.

SENTENCE WAS LENIENT

American Got Off Easy for Killing German Woman.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—In response to inquiries of friends of Emil Simon, the young American under sentence in Germany for the killing of a woman in an automobile accident, the state department has ascertained from the United States embassy in Berlin that Simon's sentence of three months imprisonment is generally regarded as lenient and he has been treated with the utmost kindness during his imprisonment. It is said the young man's failure to stop after the accident prejudiced the German authorities against him.

INDIGESTION AND GOUT

SAGE OF PRINCETON HAS HIS OWN TRIALS.

Grover Cleveland Goes Out Driving Daily and at Present Is Feeling 'Fit as Fiddle'

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 15.—Former President Grover Cleveland took his usual carriage ride this afternoon. He was out nearly two hours and was accompanied by a trained nurse. He was not driving on Saturday, but was out on Friday, accompanied only by his coachman.

Upon his return this afternoon Mr. Cleveland was seen by a reporter of the Associated Press, and when asked as to his health, said: "I feel good, remarking: "You can see how I feel."

Mr. Cleveland as a rule denies himself to callers, but has lost none of his interest in affairs and reads the newspapers and attends to his correspondence regularly.

Mrs. Cleveland returned to Princeton about three weeks ago and later returned to Tamworth, N. H., where the Cleveland children have been spending the summer. She will return to Princeton permanently next week.

Friends of the former president say his general health at present is better than at any time during the past summer. He is still subject to indigestion, but has not had an attack lately. He is also gouty at times, but it is not considered serious, as it only affects him in one foot.

IS NOBLEMAN TRAITOR?

LORD ASHTOWN MAY BE ANTI-IRISH AGENT.

Mystery Surrounds Alleged Plot Which Was Divulged by Bomb Explosion.

DUBLIN, Sept. 15.—The police report of the attempt to blow up the hunting lodge of Lord Ashtown, near Clonmel, August 13, is published this morning. It maintains that the fuse was lighted from outside the house, and that the bomb was prepared from a pot that had once been in the lodge. The police also say they were kept in ignorance of Lord Ashtown's arrival home, that the dogs had been tied up, that no entrance was effected from the outside and that the window at which the explosion occurred must have been open when the bomb was fired.

This report, coming from such an unusual source, is taken as an allegation that Lord Ashtown is the head of an organization for the dissemination of anti-Irish news in England and is bound to cause a sensation.

Lord Ashtown's lodge was partially destroyed by a bomb explosion while he was asleep. It was said that his activity in the cattle grazing war earned for him the animosity of the peasants and he characterized the explosion as an attempt on their part to kill him.

INJURY RESULTS IN DEATH

Ore Sorter on Granite Dies From Fractured Skull.

VICTOR, Sept. 15.—The death of S. W. Weibel, an ore sorter on the Granite mine, occurred this morning as the result of a crushed skull, caused by a piece of rock which hit the man on the head last Thursday while at work in the mine. The deceased was 45 years of age, a member of the W. O. W., and leaves a wife and son living in Denver, where the body will be interred.

PASTEURIZED MILK A MENACE

Unless Kept Under Proper Conditions and Soon Consumed, It Is Dangerous, Says Doctor.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 15.—Dr. Henry L. Coit of Newark, N. J., president of the American Association of Medical Milk Commissioners, strongly opposed, in an address today at the international milk congress, the compulsory pasteurization of milk as a means of effectively improving the supply. Dr. Coit said that to employ pasteurization as anything more than a temporary expedient would be undesirable, because it would remove the incentive to the public to compel the producer to accomplish an improvement. Pasteurized milk in bulk is not only intrinsically less desirable than clean raw milk, declared Dr. Coit, but is actually unsafe unless it is consumed within 24 hours and is kept at or below 10 degrees centigrade (50 degrees Fahrenheit). Dr. Coit also said:

"To resort to the compulsory pasteurization of the milk supply in large cities, as a protection against tuberculosis, instead of taking more radical measures for its eradication from milk herds, would be protecting only those who live in these cities and expose all who live in the rural districts. The only real safeguard lies in the complete eradication of bovine tuberculosis."

GREAT PROGRESS AND PROSPERITY

ANNUAL REPORT OF D. & R. G. BOOST FOR COLORADO.

BIGGEST IN ROAD'S HISTORY

PRESIDENT JEFFERY SHOWS THAT TIMES ARE GOOD.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE

Line of Western Pacific Will Be Completed From Salt Lake to Oakland, Cal., Within Ensuing Year—Prospects Are Brighter Than Ever.

DENVER, Sept. 15.—The twenty-first annual report of the Denver and Rio Grande railroad issued by President E. T. Jeffery shows that the income for the company for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, was $21,652,420, an increase of $1,704,181 as compared with the previous year and the net earnings were $8,156,929 an increase of $574,986.

In these figures is told the story of the prosperity of Colorado and Utah. This prosperity, as President E. T. Jeffery says, is due, in a great measure, to the lawful and peaceful endeavor of all classes of good labor, at good wages, to promote industry and commerce and the general welfare of the two states. Furthermore, says Mr. Jeffery, there is every reason to believe that the next report will tell an even more gratifying tale.

This report refutes the idea of industrial depression. It shows that whatever the prevailing sentiment in Wall Street, the west in general, and Colorado in particular, is a thriving, hustling region, that does not know of the existence of any such thing as depression.

Labor Is Scarce.

Finally, says Mr. Jeffery, "it is hoped and believed that the Western Pacific railway company will have a continuous line of rails from Salt Lake City to Oakland by September 1, 1908, or very soon thereafter. Work has been delayed by the general scarcity of labor throughout the country, accentuated by the demand for labor in San Francisco."

The total assets of the company are $172,012,443.87, an increase of $3,325,262.71; the total liabilities, $103,208,221.74, an increase of $864,611.42.

The total cost of the road up to June 30, including the Rio Grande Western, was $117,846,803.16. The total cost of betterments during the year just past was $690,036.71. The sum of $1,256,915.54 was spent on equipment.

Enormous Business Done.

The total of freight business in the year was 8,788,819 tons, bringing in $15,223,165.46, revenue, as compared with $13,945,556.31 in the previous year. The number of passengers hauled was 2,065,273, with revenue of $4,934,158.80, as compared with $4,609,425.15 in the year previous.

The average number of miles operated was increased to 2,506, with earnings of $8,564 per mile, and expenses of $5,501, making the net earnings per mile $2,26[illegible].

The following extracts from the statement of President Jeffery are instructive:

"The income of the Denver & Rio Grande company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, including $243,279.17 interest and dividends received, was $21,652,420.89, an increase of $1,704,181.27 as compared with the previous year.

Figures Tell Good Story.

"The gross earnings from operation were $21,469,041.72, being an increase of $1,722,926.23 over the previous year; the operation expenses was $13,252,112.26, being an increase of $1,147,940.16, and the net earnings were $8,156,929.46, an increase of $574,986.23. The percentage of increase in gross earnings was 8.7 per cent, in expenses 9.48 per cent and in net earnings 7.55 per cent.

"After providing for all charges against income, including two semi-annual dividends of 2½ per cent each upon the preferred capital stock, and contributing $120,000 to the renewal fund, there remained a surplus from the year's operation of $1,758,944.17.

"From which appropriations were made for additional standard gauge equipment, $825,000,000; additions and improvements to the fixed plants, $700,000; a total of $1,525,000, leaving surplus carried to profit and loss $244,944.17.

Bonds and Stocks.

"There are bonds and stocks in the treasury of the company at par value amounting to $81,744,507.50, which are carried on the books at $28,107,970.17; also bonds at par, and cash in the special renewal fund amounting to $433,512.54, carried at $304,826.23, and bonds and stocks deposited with the Morton Trust company as collateral for certain first consolidated mortgage bonds of the Rio Grande Western Railway company, amounting at par value to $18,614,000 and carried at $9,783,063.52.

"There were no unpaid vouchers at the close of the fiscal year, except those for June, which are payable in the ordinary course of business during July.

"The independent examination of the accounts of the company, required by the by-laws, was made by Mr. R. E. Pryor, vice president of the Western railroad, his selection being made upon at the last annual meeting of the stockholders."

SCORES KILLED WHILE ASLEEP

At once those who had escaped harm saw their task. The cries and moans of the injured prompted speedy action. Out from under broken beams and splintered joists, bleeding forms were dragged and laid on broken backs of seats or blankets from the sleeper. Wounds were hastily bound up with torn sheets from the berths and such other help as could be hastily provided was given. An hour elapsed before physicians could be brought from Hanover, White River Junction and Canaan. The dead were placed beside the track to await more satisfactory disposition.

As the sun rose the full horror of the disaster became apparent. Along the side of the track lay the dead yet uncovered. A little further off were the living, some stretched on the ground with relatives, friends or strangers binding their wounds and encouraging them. There were comparatively few in that crowd of rescuers who did not show some wound from the disaster.

Many Saved by Song.

One of the passengers who was in the smoking car to the rear of the ill-fated passenger coach described the accident as follows:

"I had one of the seats in the middle of the car when the train left White River Junction and like everyone else, was dozing when someone woke up and began to sing. This aroused nearly everyone else in the car and some of the men decided to go back to the next car for a smoke. I joined the little procession. My companion in the seat stayed and was killed. We had scarcely taken our seats in the smoker when the brakes were suddenly set and we were thrown out of our seats. The next minute there was a crash and I found myself on the floor covered with glass from the windows, but unhurt. We crawled out from under the seats and stumbled out of the rear door. The front one was completely wrecked by the end of the passenger coach. Everyone seemed dazed for what seemed five minutes. It probably was only a few seconds. There was not a sound. Then we heard groans, moans and finally shrieks from the front of the train, and running forward we saw the wreck of the passenger car. It was just light enough to see a little, but it made one sick to see even that much. Everyone then began to work hard, and it seemed hours before help came."

Train Was Late.

The passenger train had left here bound for Concord about an hour late. The track to the south is a single one to Franklin, 50 miles distant, with a few sidings. It abounds in curves while the greater part of it from Canaan is down grade. The freight train pulled out of a siding some miles to the south and started up the track for this place at 4 o'clock. The train despatcher's sheet at Concord is declared to show that the freight crew disobeyed orders in doing so. There are no signals on the road and the trains are directed from the station. Going north it is a long straight track from Canaan to the curve where the accident happened, and the freight was making good time when the passenger train came around the curve. It is estimated both trains were going at a speed of 30 to 40 miles an hour. There was time to put on the brakes and then both engine crews jumped and escaped injury.

Work of Rescue.

As soon as possible after the collision two of the passenger train men who had escaped were sent to Canaan, the nearest station, for help while others sought nearby cottages and farm houses for assistance. In the western New Hampshire mountains doctors are few and an hour went by before the first physician arrived.

A hospital train was dispatched from here within a few minutes after news of the accident was received, and by 8 o'clock the first of the most seriously injured had reached here. Seven were afterwards sent to Hanover to avoid overcrowding the local hospitals. Soon after daylight a crowd from the country side began to assemble, and by the middle of the forenoon wrecking trains were sent from White River Junction and Concord and put to work and the track was cleared early in the afternoon, although ten of the 30 freight cars which had comprised that train, were derailed and the track was torn up for a quarter of a mile. By noon the work of rescue had been completed and it became known that the number of dead was 24. Twenty-two of them were taken by train to Concord and two were sent to this place. Before the removal, 14 had been identified.

Brakeman a Hero.

The accident was not without its heroes and one of these was Frank Ryan, a brakeman on the express. Ryan was caught in the wreck and had an artery severed. He was unconscious for nearly 15 minutes, and when he regained his senses his first thought was of the Montreal express, which he knew was thundering down on the wreck. In a few words Ryan told of the approaching danger, and the Montreal Express was stopped only a quarter of a mile from the rear of the wrecked train. The passengers on the Montreal Express also assisted in the work of rescue and the care of the wounded. Among the West Canaan farmers who aided was Benjamin Briggs, who was one of the first at the scene, and two hours later he drew out the body of a woman. On turning up the face Mr. Briggs looked into the features of his mother and almost collapsed from grief. Mrs. Briggs had been visiting friends in the north and was on her way to Boston.

HANOVER, N. H., Sept. 15.—The unknown boy who was taken to the Margaret Hitchcock hospital here, suffering from arm and leg fractures received in the Canaan wreck died tonight, making the number of deaths from the wreck 25.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 15.—The Rev. Alexander McGregor of the Park Congregational church, will announce tomorrow that he has accepted a call from Whittier, Cal., and will leave for his new station about November 15.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK

STANDARD OIL COMPANY ON THE GRIDDLE.

Chicago & Alton Immunity Will Be Discussed—Canada Will Settle Japanese Immigration.

Chief among the important events scheduled for this week is the taking of evidence in New York before a United States commissioner to dissolve the Standard Oil company. Interest will also center in a conference in Chicago in which Attorney General Bonaparte and Judge Landis may decide what action shall be taken in the Chicago & Alton cases, and importance attaches to conferences of Central American delegates in Washington on Monday to discuss a compact for permanent peace. Municipal problems will be considered by the League of American Municipalities, which convenes in Norfolk on Wednesday.

A conference is expected to take place at Ottawa, Ontario, Monday between Premier Laurier and Baron Ishii, the special envoy of the Japanese foreign office, when the subject of Japanese immigration to Canada and the recent riot at Vancouver will be considered.

Oklahoma will elect state officers and congressmen and vote on the question of accepting its new constitution on Tuesday.

IS EXCUSED FROM VOTING

Belgium's Delegate at The Hague Will Remain at Post.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 15.—The retirement of H. Beernaert (Belgium) from further participation in the peace conference at The Hague has been averted by a compromise by which the Belgian representative is to be absolved from voting against compulsory arbitration. Instructions sent M. Beernaert, by his government, to cast the vote of the Belgian delegation against the proposal brought out a notification of his intention to resign and the statement that as a life-long supporter of the cause of arbitration he unequivocally refused to vote against the measure. The resignation of M. Beernaert would have meant the practical extinction of Belgium as a factor in the conference, and so the government has arranged that on the question of arbitration M. Vandenhouvel and Baron Guillaume shall be considered Belgium's sole representatives.

MEANS MUCH TO SOLDIERS

All Retired Veterans Entitled to $15.75 Per Month.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The latest construction given by the comptroller of the treasury to the act of March 2, 1907, relative to the allowances to be given to retired private soldiers will mean much to that large class. The first view taken of this act was that it did not apply to the soldiers retired before its passage, and the very men who had for 20 years been working to secure the legislation found themselves about to be deprived of its benefits. But now, as the outcome of several conferences between Paymaster General Sniffin, who has been indefatigable in his efforts to aid the retired privates, and Comptroller Mitchell, the latter has decided that all retired men are entitled to the allowance of $15.75 a month.

A BEGINNING OF SWAMP RECLAMATION

For some years government officials have been considering the possibility of swamp reclamation as a complementary process to desert reclamation. The one is carried out by drainage, the other by irrigation, but both work to the same end of increasing the available land for cultivation.

Drainage, like irrigation, requires engineering ability of no mean order, and many small experiments have failed or proved themselves too costly. The government engineers are, however, about to show what results can be attained as the result of their experiments and studies by overseeing the reclamation of 10,000 acres of swamp lands in New Jersey, lying between Newark, Elizabeth and Jersey City. Newark and Elizabeth propose to issue bonds to pay for the work, but the federal government will furnish the plans, surveys and supervision.

These meadows are covered by salt water at high tide, so that the first task is to protect them from the ocean by substantial dikes. In addition to this they are cut through by several creeks, one carrying a considerable amount of water. That complicates the drainage problem seriously. At low tide the creeks would empty into the ocean, but at high tide, when the dikes keep out the salt water, the creeks will be doing their share in covering the marshes. It becomes necessary, therefore, to build automatic gates, which will let the water out at low tide, but will close at high tide, and to provide storage for the fresh water during the high tide periods. After this work has been accomplished the soil will need treatment to rid it of superfluous salt, and later, as it gradually settles with drying, it may need to be filled in to the level of the country around.

Heretofore the chief product of the marshes has been mosquitoes and incidentally malaria. If the drainage operations are successful the land will at once, it is thought, be worth $1,000 an acre for market garden purposes, and before long much more for city building lots.

There is much marsh land all the way along the Atlantic coast to be reclaimed by similar methods, but it does not begin to compare in extent with the interior marshes which can probably be reclaimed. Both the west and the east will benefit by the projects in the long run.

CANADA BEATS AMERICA.

In rifle practice among civilians, Canada is far ahead of the United States. It has 122 military rifle associations and 450 civilian rifle associations. The military associations have a membership of 18,088, and the civilian, 34,370. In Canada each member of a civilian club draws 100 rounds of ammunition yearly and the government allots a rifle to every four men. If no rifle range is available, a small cash allowance is made toward the expenses of the club.

BAD BANDIT IS SHOT

Quarreled Over Stolen Booty and Met Death.

EL PASO, Tex., Sept. 15.—In a quarrel over a division of money, of which they had robbed a mining camp, Federio Lopez, leader of a gang of Mexican outlaws which for years has terrorized the state of Sonora, was shot and killed at the bandits' stronghold on the Upper Yaqui river, in Sonora. The extermination of the gang by the Mexican authorities is now believed to be only a matter of a short time.

HITS UMPIRE WITH BOTTLE

St. Louis Youth Arrested for Fanning Too Hard.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 15.—During the St. Louis-American league baseball game Umpire Evans was struck on the head by a soda water bottle in the hands of a spectator and was seriously injured, but it is expected he will be out again in a few days. The thrower of the bottle, a lad 17 years, declares he had no intention of hitting the umpire, and is under arrest. The large crowd in attendance expressed strong disapproval of the act, but the speedy arrival of policemen prevented trouble.

GIVES TRIBESMEN RESPITE

General Drude Wants Moors to Come to Agreement.

PARIS, Sept. 15.—General Drude, in a dispatch to the war office announces that he has given the Moroccan tribesmen another day's armistice to enable them to come to an understanding among themselves. A delegate from the Chaiouia tribe, who made the request for prolongation of the armistice, said that his tribe would, if necessary, use force to bring the other tribes to an agreement.

READY FOR ELECTIONS

Republicans in Oklahoma Hope for Three Congressmen.

GUTHRIE, Okla., Sept. 15.—The state campaign in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory practically closed last night. The election will be held Tuesday.

The Republicans, despite the big Democratic majority in the state, are hopeful of electing the governor and are confident of electing two, and possibly three, of their five candidates for congress. Everything else is conceded to the Democrats. The three in the order named are: B. S. McGuire, T. B. Ferguson and Frank Hubbard.

The constitution drawn up for the new state will be passed upon.

PERTHSHIRE HEROINES.

Sentimental Power of the Ballad, "Bessie Bell and Mary Gray."

From the Dundee Advertiser.

The ballads of Perthshire do not bear comparison with those of the south of Scotland either in number, lyrical [illegible] & atmosphere, we may in general admit this to be true, but there is one ballad which Perthshire people dwell on, and even those from other parts of Scotland confess its haunting power. It is the ballad of "Bessie Bell and Mary Gray." The writer has the impression that this threnody has been ably "edited" by Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe and its melody increased by the skill of that brilliant man, who had an ear for music and an eye for the pathetic or gratesque in life. Sharpe's drawing of Queen Elizabeth dancing is an inimitable commentary on the absurdities of "a forty-year-auld lass," and no wonder that it is preserved at Abbotsford to this day; but still with his strong powers of satire Sharpe had a warm heart. There are various transcriptions of the opening verses of the ballad, and here is one:

O Bessie Bell and Mary Gray,
They were twa strappin' lassies,
They biggit a bower on yon burn-brae
And theekit o'er wi' rashes.

They thocht to lie in Methven Kirk,
Amang a' their gentle kin',
But they were laid in Dronach Haugh,
To beik fonnent the sun.

The last line may startle the cockney, or even the Scotsman who has lost his hold of the vernacular. To beik means here to bask. "It seems grim jesting this," remarked an English critic, "about the bodies of those once lovely girls baking in the clay under the fierce heat of a summer sun, but it is thoroughly Caledonian. The people who find in 'a coffining' of a funeral, an occasion for consuming at least a gill of blistering whisky each, dwell with sanctified relish and a smack of the lips on the modes and special processes of decomposition."

No genuine Scotsman will agree with this ignorant and acrid criticism, and we advise all who approve of it to beware when they come to Perth lest their sleep be broken as St. John's big bell tolls midnight by the phantoms of portly Bailie Luke and the venerable Sheriff Substitute Barclay appearing at their bedroot in a blaze of magenta colored light and at once gripping them with white hot pincers. In an excellent article by an expert in the Scottish Review, it is pointed out that the late Dr. Livingstone found comfort in the thought that the mortal remains of his noble wife rest on Shapanga brae and "beik fonnent the sun." The story on which the ballad is founded is that Bessie Bell and Mary Gray were the daughters of two Perthshire proprietors, and to escape the decimating plague of 1666 they built a hut or bower in Lynedoch Wood. Mary Gray had a sweetheart who followed them, and unconsciously carried the plague infection, so that both Mary and Elizabeth died from the malady and were laid in the Dronaugh Haugh, quite near—to "beik forment the sun." A Major Barry, to his infinite credit, inclosed their graves with a wall in 1760, and the inscription ran thus:

They lived, they loved, they died.

When the estate of Lynedoch was purchased by Thomas Graham—afterward Lord Lynedoch—no particular attention was paid for years to the cemetery of those "lassies o' high degree." The hero of Barossa had his own share of affliction, and tried to forget them amid the cannon thunder and the clash of steel. The Mary Gray and Bessie Bell story is no picturesque legend, but founded on fact. The ballad is alike pathetic and suggestive. It illustrates the proverb, "There is love in remembrance."

PASSENGERS GET REVENGE.

Hobo Wounds Conductor and Is Killed by Mob.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Sept. 15.—Because Jeff Gage of the Southern Pacific put him off the train on his refusal to pay his fare, an unknown man seriously wounded the conductor and was himself killed in a pistol duel this afternoon just after the train left Tracy City. Conductor Gage had put the man off the train and had stepped down from the platform to give the engineer the signal, when the man fired at him, the bullet entering the right groin. Passengers took up the fight, and the would-be murderer was killed by a bullet piercing his left lung.

WILL REMEMBER ESCAPADE

Cadet Punished for Disobeying Orders on Ship.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—James E. Austin of the first class, naval academy, who was recommended for dismissal by Superintendent Badger for leaving his practice ship after shore leave had been refused, will be allowed to remain at the academy, but forfeits his vacation and is given a number of demerits. The cases of all four cadets recommended for dismissal by Captain Badger for various reasons have now been disposed of, two of them being permitted to resign and the others remaining under punitive conditions.

LADY BALLOONIST KILLED

Falls One Thousand Feet From Parachute to Death.

OLEAN, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Mrs. Carrie Myers, 33 years old, of Springfield, Mass., a professional balloonist, fell from a parachute 1,000 feet above the fair grounds here today and was dashed to death in view of 8,000 persons. Mrs. Myers made her first ascension Wednesday, when she sprained her left wrist. She was urged to abandon the flight today. When about 1,000 feet above the ground Mrs. Myers was seen to raise her right hand to release the parachute, holding to the trapeze with her lame hand. Just as the canvas spread out and the rapid downward flight was checked, Mrs. Myers fell backward. It is believed the sudden jar hurt her lame wrist.

BRIEF BITS OF NEWS

BERNE, Sept. 15.—The toll of summer victims of Alpine accidents is the heaviest ever recorded. Eighty persons were killed and 22 injured in 50 accidents this year. Thirty-eight of the 80 persons killed were guides; 31 were persons spending vacations in the Alps, and the remainder were native flower gatherers.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 15.—About 1,000 members of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows are in St. Paul to attend the eighty-third annual convention of the sovereign grand lodge, which opens tomorrow. Several thousand more are expected tomorrow.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 15.—One hundred thousand persons today witnessed the start of a great international balloon race organized by the Belgian Aeronautic club. Thirty-four balloons ascended. The contestants comprise 11 Belgians, 10 Frenchmen, eight Germans, two Englishmen, one Brazilian, one Swiss and one Italian.

MUNICH, Sept. 15.—The sixteenth international peace congress, which had been in session since September 9, ended last night, and the delegates left the city today. The general opinion is that the congress has been a most successful one.

HAMMERFEST, Norway, Sept. 15.—The Duke of Orleans' expedition to Nova Zembla, arrived here yesterday, homeward bound, and departed today for Bergen. The expedition left Vardo, Norway, July 13, on board the yacht Belgica, and plumbed and mapped the Kara sea.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Sept. 15.—The Central league baseball season closed today, the Springfield, O., team winning the pennant with a total of 87 games won and 49 lost. Wheeling finished second. Canton, Evansville, Dayton, Terre Haute, Grand Rapids and South Bend in the order named.

ESSEN, Sept. 15.—Some 450 delegates, male and female, attended the opening of the Social Democratic congress tonight. Herr Singer, who was chosen president, in a speech dwelt at length on the industrial development in the rural district, where, he said, the citadel of capitalism was to be found.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 15.—An ardent courtship, that began in Italy several years ago, culminated in Los Angeles today in a tragedy, when Lorenz Isaia, an Italian baker, shot and seriously wounded Maria Isaia, an Italian waitress. Isaia was lodged in jail. Although the couple are of the same name, they were not related.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 15.—Brother Dominick, provincial, in charge of all schools conducted in this country by the Brothers of the Xaverian Order, died at St. Mary's Industrial school this afternoon, following a stroke of apoplexy.

DUELING IN OLD CREOLE DAYS.

When dueling was an actual factor in the social order of this country, it had many worthy and notable exponents, including no less distinguished personages than Henry Clay, Andrew Jackson, Alexander Hamilton, De Witt Clinton, Stephen Decatur and others of the same type, but nowhere on this continent was it so much an established institution as in that peculiarly romantic old city of New Orleans.

It was woven into the very fabric of the life of the community, and many a crumbling tombstone in the antiquated Creole cemeteries bears grim and silent witness to the fact, though to understand the situation more clearly one should breathe, so to speak, the atmosphere of the period.—Louis J. Meader, in the Century.

HOT PITCHING BATTLE.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—Walsh and Liebhardt engaged in a desperate pitching duel today. Cleveland won, 3 to 2. The greatest crowd in the history of the local American league club saw the contest, the grounds being filled and the gates closed long before the game started. Chicago earned a run in the fifth and bunched three hits for another in the seventh, tying Cleveland, who had scored twice in the sixth on solid hitting. The visitors took the lead again in the ninth on the double and Leibhardt's single. Score:

									R.	H.	E.

LINCOLN'S DOUBTS OF HIS RE-ELECTION.

From the New York World.

The article in the Century by David Homer Bates dealing with Lincoln's forebodings of defeat at the polls in 1864, throws an interesting sidelight on the president's habit of self-distrust and disparagement where his personal hopes were concerned.

Lincoln's estimate of the electoral vote which he made on a telegraph blank in the government telegraph office three weeks before election in particular illustrates this trait. In the McClellan column he put New York, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Kentucky, his own state, Illinois and Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware, 114 votes in all. To himself he gave the New England states, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Oregon, California, Kansas, Indiana, Ohio and West Virginia, 117 votes. To these Major Eckert added the three votes of Nevada, which was admitted to the Union by presidential proclamation on October 31, 1864. At this very time Jacob Thompson, Confederate agent in Canada, was writing to Jefferson Davis: "The election of Lincoln is almost certain." How unduly pessimistic Lincoln's estimate of his chances was is shown by the actual result of the election, at which McClellan received only 21 votes, those of New Jersey, Kentucky and Delaware.

The influences which contributed to Lincoln's fears, working on a nature inclined to melancholy and self-blame, were no doubt, as Mr. Bates conjectures, the slurs of his political enemies, the nagging of professed friends and the disappointing results of the emancipation proclamation, together with his consciousness of a strong anti-war feeling at the north. But Lincoln was the shrewdest politician of his day. Nothing could better illustrate his despondency and nervous exhaustion at this critical period than his remarkable misjudgment of public sentiment.

CZAR'S ONLY GREAT AUNT.

The czar's one and only great aunt, the grand duchess of Alexandra-Josefovna of Russia, bought two pairs of camels some years ago, while on a visit to the Caucasus, and at her lovely place outside St. Petersburg she devotes much of her time each summer to her somewhat uncommon pets. She has now no fewer than seventeen of the animals, and several zoological gardens in various Russian towns have been presented with camels bred upon the grand duchess' estate.

CHAPTER I.

DESERT SEAS.

The late afternoon sky flaunted its splendor of blue and gold like a banner over the Pacific, across whose depths the trade wind droned in measured cadence. On the ocean's wide expanse a hulk wallowed sluggishly. The forgotten relict of a once brave and sightly ship, possibly the Sphinx of some untold ocean tragedy, she lay black and forbidding in the ordered procession of waves. Half a mile to the east of the derelict hovered a ship's cutter, the turn of her crew's heads speaking expectancy.

As far again beyond, the United States cruiser Wolverine outlined her severe and trim silhouette against the horizon. In all the spread of wave and sky no other thing was visible. For this was one of the desert parts of the Pacific, 800 miles north of the steamship route from Yokohama to Honolulu, 500 miles from the nearest land, Gardner island, and more than 700 northwest of the Hawaiian group.

On the cruiser's quarter-deck the officers lined the starboard rail. Their interest was focused on the derelict.

"Looks like a heavy job," said Ives, one of the junior lieutenants. "These floaters that lie with deck almost awash will stand more hammering than a mud fort."

"Wish they'd let us put some six-inch shells into her," said Billy Edwards, the ensign, a wistful expression on his boyish, cheerful face. "I'd like to see what they would do."

"Nothing but waste a few hundred dollars of your Uncle Sam's money," observed Carter, the officer of the deck. "It takes placed charges inside and out for that kind of work."

The Information Bureau of the Seven Seas.

"Barnett's the man for her, then," said Ives. "He's no economist when it comes to getting results. There she goes!"

Without any particular haste, as it seemed to the watchers, the hulk was shouldered out of the water, as by some hidden leviathan. Its outlines melted into a black, outshowering mist, and from that mist leaped a giant. Up, up, he towered, tossed whirling arms a hundred feet abranch, shivered and dissolved into a widespread cataract. The water below was lashed into fury, in the midst of which a mighty death agony beat back the troubled waves of the trade wind. Only then did the muffled double boom of the explosion reach the ears of the spectators, presently to be followed by a whispering, swift-skimming wavelet that swept irresistibly across the bigger surges and lapped the ship's side, as for a message that the work was done.

Here and there in the sea a glint of silver, a patch of purple, or dull red, or a glistening apparition of black showed where the unintended victims of the explosion, the gay-hued open-sea fish of the warm waters, had succumbed to the force of the shock. Of the intended victim there was no sign, save a few fragments of wood bobbing in a swirl of water.

When Barnett, the ordnance officer in charge of the destruction, returned to the ship Carter complimented him.

"Good, clean job, Barnett. She was a tough customer, too."

"The Caroline Lemp, three-masted schooner. Any one know about her?"

Ives turned to the ship's surgeon, Trendon, a grizzled and brief-spoken veteran, who had at his fingers' tips all the lore of all the waters under the reign of the moon.

"What does the information bureau of the Seven Seas know about it?"

"Lost three years ago—spring of 1901—got into ice field off the tip of the Aleutians. Some of the survivors accounted for. Others not. Say they've turned native. Don't know myself."

"The Aleutians!" exclaimed Billy Edwards. "Great Cats! What a drift! How many thousand miles would that be?"

"Not as far as many another derelict has wandered in her time, son," said Barnett.

The talk washed back and forth across the hulks of classic sea mysteries, new and old, of the city of Boston, which went down with all hands, leaving for record only a melancholy scrawl on a bit of board to meet the wondering eyes of a fisherman on the far Cornish coasts of the Great Queensland, which set out with 369 souls aboard, bound on a seas unknown to a tragic end; of the Naronic, with her silent and empty lifeboats alone left, drifting about the open sea, to hint at the story of her fate; of the Huronian, which, 10 years later, on the same day and date, and hailing from the same port as the Naronic, went out into the void, leaving no trace; of Newfoundland captains who sailed, roaring with drink, under the arches of cathedral bergs, only to be prisoned, buried and embalmed in the one icy embrace; of craft assailed by the terrible one-stroke lightning clouds of the Indian ocean, found days after, stone blind, with their crews madly hauling at useless sheets, while the officers clawed the compass and shrieked; of burnings and piracies; of pest ships and slave ships; and ships mad for want of water; of whelming earthquake waves, and mysterious suctions, drawing irresistibly against wind and steam power upon a swift current, or stout ships motionless on placid although sound and seaworthy seas, of others so swiftly dragged down that there was not time for any to save himself; and of a hundred other strange, stirring and pitiful ventures such as make up the inevitable peril and incorrigible romance of the ocean. In a pause Billy Edwards said musingly:

The Lost Laughing Lass—What About Her?

"Well, there was the Laughing Lass."

"How did you happen to hit on her?" asked Barnett quickly.

"Why not, sir? It naturally came into my head. She was last seen somewhere about this part of the world, wasn't she?" After a moment's hesitation he added: "From something I heard ashore I judge we've a commission to keep a watch out for her as well as to destroy derelicts."

"What about the Laughing Lass?" asked McGuire, the paymaster, a New Englander, who had been in the service but a short time.

"Good Lord! Don't you remember the Laughing Lass mystery, and the disappearance of Dr. Schermerhorn?"

"Karl Augustus Schermerhorn, the man whose experiments to identify telepathy with the Marconi wireless waves made such a furore in the papers?"

"Oh, that was only a by-product of his mind. He was an physiologist, biologist, chemistry, besides most of the natural sciences," said Barnett. "The government is particularly interested in him because of his contributions to aerial photography."

"And he was lost with the Laughing Lass?"

"Nobody knows," said Edwards. "He left San Francisco two years ago on a hundred-foot schooner, with an assistant, a big brass-bound chest and a megamuffin crew. A newspaper man named Slade, who dropped out of the world about the same time, is supposed to have gone along, too. Their schooner was last sighted about 450 miles northeast of Oahu, in good shape, and bound westward. That's all the record of her that there is."

"Was that Ralph Slade?" asked Barnett.

"Yes. He was a free-lance writer and artist."

"I knew him well," said Barnett. "He was in our mess in the Philippine campaign, on the North Dakota. War correspondent then. It's strange that I never identified him before with the Slade of the Laughing Lass."

"What was the object of the voyage?" asked Ives.

"They were supposed to be after buried treasure," said Barnett.

"I've always thought it more likely that Dr. Schermerhorn was on a scientific expedition," said Edwards. "I know the old boy dug in where the sort to care a hoot in Shoal for treasure, buried or unburied."

"Every time a ship sets out from San Francisco without publishing to all the world just what her business is, all the world thinks it's one of those wild-goose hunts," observed Ives.

"Yes," agreed Barnett. "Flora and fauna of some unknown island would be much more in the scientific line of traffic. Not unlikely that some of the festive natives collected the unfortunate professor."

Various theories were advanced, withdrawn, refuted, defended, and the discussion carried them through the swift twilight into the darkness which had been hastened by a high-spreading canopy of storm-clouds. Abruptly from the crow's-nest came startling news for those desolate seas. "Light—ho! Two points on the port bow."

The lookout had given extra voice to it. It was plainly heard throughout the ship.

"Tain't Any Regular and Proper Light."

The group of officers stared in the direction indicated, but could see nothing. Presently Ives and Edwards, who were the keen-sighted, made out a faint, diffused radiance. At the same time came a second hail from the crow's nest.

"On deck, sir."

"Hello," responded Carter, the officer of the deck.

"There's a light here I can't make anything out of, sir."

"What's it like?"

"Sort of a queer general glow."

"General glow, indeed!" muttered Forsythe, among the group aft. "That fellow's got an imagination."

"Can't you describe it better than that?" called Carter.

"Don't make it out at all, sir. 'Tain't any regular and proper light. Looks like a lamp in a fog."

Among themselves the officers discussed it interestedly, as it grew plainer.

"Not unlike the electric glow above a city, seen from a distance," said Barnett, as it grew plainer.

"Yes, but the nearest electric-lighted city is some 800 miles away," objected Ives.

"Mirage, maybe," suggested Edwards.

"Pretty hard-working mirage, to cover that distance," said Ives. "Though I've seen 'em."

"Great heavens! Look at that!" shouted Edwards.

A great shaft of pale brilliance shot up toward the zenith. Under it whirled a maelstrom of varied radiance, pale with distance, but marvelously beautiful. Forsythe passed them with a troubled face on his way below to report, as his relief went up.

"The quartermaster reports the compass behaving queerly," he said.

Three minutes later the captain was on the bridge. The great ship had swung, and they were speeding direct for the phenomenon. But within a few minutes the light had died out.

"Another sea mystery to add to our list," said Billy Edwards. "Did any one ever see a show like that before? What do you think, Doc?"

"Humph!" grunted the veteran. "New to me. Volcanic, maybe."

CHAPTER II.

THE LAUGHING LASS.

The falling of dusk on June 3 found tired eyes aboard the Wolverine. Every officer in her complement had kept a private and personal lookout all day for some explanation of the previous night's phenomenon. All that rewarded them were a sky filmed with lofty clouds, and the boiling parade of the epauleted waves.

Nor did evening bring a repetition of that strange glow. Midnight found the late stayers still deep in the discussion.

"One thing is certain," said Ives. "It wasn't volcanic."

"Why so?" asked the paymaster.

"Because volcanoes are mostly stationary, and we headed due for the light."

"Yes, but did we keep headed?" asked Barnett, who was navigating officer as well as ordnance officer, in a queer voice.

"What do you mean, sir?" asked Edwards eagerly.

"After the light disappeared the compass kept on varying. The stars were hidden. There is no telling just where we were headed for some time."

"Then we might be 50 miles from the spot we aimed at."

"Hardly that," said the navigator. "We could guide her to some extent by the direction of wind and waves. If it was volcanic we ought certainly to have sighted it by now."

"Always some electricity in volcanic eruptions," said Trendon. "Makes compass cut didoes. Seen it before."

"Where?" queried Carter.

"Off Martinique. Before eruption. Needle chased it's tail like a kitten."

"Are there many volcanoes hereabouts?" somebody asked.

"We're in 162 west, 31 north, about," said Barnett. "No telling whether there are or not. There weren't at last accounts, but that's no evidence that there aren't some since. They come up in the night, these volcanic islands."

"Just carry an eye on the charts," said Billy Edwards. "Full of E. D's and P. D's all over the shop. Every one of 'em volcanic."

"E. D's and P. D's?" queried the paymaster.

"Existence doubtful, and position doubtful," explained the ensign. "Every time the skipper of one of these wandering trade ships sees a speck in his eye he reports an island. If he really does bump into a rock he cuts in an arithmetic book for his latitude and longitude and lets it go at that. That's how the chart-makers make a living, getting out new editions every few months."

"But it's a fact that these seas are constantly changing," said Barnett. "They're so little traveled that no one happens to be around to see an island born. I don't suppose there's a part on the earth's surface more liable to seismic disturbances than this region."

"Seismic!" cried Billy Edwards. "I should say it was seismic! Why, when a native of one of these island groups sets his heart on a particular loaf of bread up his breadfruit tree, he doesn't bother to climb after it. Just waits for some earthquake to happen along and shake it down to him."

"Good boy, Billy," said Dr. Trendon, approvingly. "Do another."

"It's a fact," said the ensign, heatedly. "Why, a couple of years back there was a trader here stocked up with a lot of belly-mixture in bottles. Thought he was going to make his pile because there'd been a colic epidemic in the islands the season before. Bottles were labeled 'Do not shake.' That ruled his business. Might as well have marked 'em 'Keep frozen' in this part of the world. Fellow went broke."

Such a Glow as That Never Came From a Volcano.

"In any case," said Barnett, "such a glow as that we sighted last night I've never seen from any volcano."

"Nor I," said Trendon. "Don't prove it mightn't have been."

"I'll just bet the best dinner in San Francisco that it isn't," said Edwards.

"You're on," said Carter.

"Let me in," suggested Ives.

"And I'll take one of it," said McGuire.

"Come one, come all," said Edwards cheerily. "I'll live high on the collective bad judgment of this outfit."

"Tonight isn't likely to settle it, anyhow," said Ives. "I move we turn in."

Expectant minds do not lend themselves to sound slumber. All night the officers of the Wolverine slept on the verge of waking, but it was not until dawn that the cry of "Sail-ho!" sent them all hurrying to their clothes.

They found Carter, whose watch on deck it was, reprimanding the lookout.

"No, sir," the man was insisting, "she didn't show no light, sir. I'd a' sighted her an hour ago, sir, if she had."

"We shall see," said Carter, grimly. "Who's your relief?"

"Sennett."

"Let him take your place. Go aloft, Sennett."

As the lookout, crestfallen and surly, went below, Barnett said in subdued tones:

"Upon my word, I shouldn't be surprised if the man were right. Certainly there's something queer about that hooker. Look how she handles herself."

The vessel was some three miles to windward. She was a schooner of the common two-masted Pacific type, but she was comporting herself in a manner uncommon to the Pacific or any other ocean. Even as Barnett spoke she heeled well over and came rushing up into the wind, where she stood with all sails shaking. Slowly she paid off again, bearing away from them. Now she gathered full headway, yet edged little by little to windward again.

DRINKING LEADS TO MURDER

Ball Player Shoots Hotelman Who Had Refused to Furnish More Whisky.

BATAVIA, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Edward Conniff, proprietor of the Byron Road hotel near Batavia, was shot and instantly killed this afternoon by Francis E. Bentley, a professional baseball player, who is under arrest. Bentley claims self-defense. At the hotel it was said that Bentley, who had no money demanded a drink, which was given to him. He asked for more and it is alleged, drew a revolver when this was refused. Conniff tried to take the revolver away and in the scuffle was shot through the head. Bentley was a member of a Portland, Oregon club this year.

REDUCE COPPER OUTPUT HALF

North Butte and Calumet and Arizona Companies Curtail Production.

DULUTH, Sept. 15.—The directors of the North Butte and the Calumet and Arizona mining companies today decided to curtail the production of their copper mines 50 per cent. This will mean a reduction of 300 tons a month at the Calumet and Arizona mines and 500 at the North Butte. The Calumet and Arizona is one of the leading producers at Bisbee, Arizona, and the North Butte company operates a large mine at Butte, Mont.

In explaining the action of the directors, President Briggs of the Calumet and Arizona said: "It is currently reported that there is a surplus of 250,000,000 pounds of copper almost entirely in the hands of the producers. Once the demand for the metal is resumed, the surplus will disappear like magic if good times continue."

TO SUE FOR $1,000,000

James F. Burns Will Give Portland Officers More Trouble.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 15.—From a reliable source it was learned today that James F. Burns of Colorado Springs is to bring suit for $1,000,000 against the officers and directors of the Portland Gold Mining company as soon as the expert examination of the Portland books is completed. Burns claims this amount as representing the loss he has sustained through the alleged mismanagement of the company's property and the depreciation in the stock and mine.

BOILERMAKERS ON STRIKE

Machine Shops of Several Railroads Are Tied Up.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 15.—A general strike of boilermakers on the Chicago Great Western, Great Northern, Omaha, Northern Pacific and Soo railroads was called today and it is expected that before night the shops of the entire systems of those roads will be tied up. The boilermakers are aided in their fight by their helpers and in the case of the Great Western the machinists in the big shops at Oelwein went out in sympathy.

HAMBURG, Sept. 15.—The new Hamburg American steamer President Grant, sister ship of the President Lincoln, started on her maiden voyage to New York today with a full complement of passengers.

THANKFUL FOR ESCAPE

Services Commemorate Safety of the Czar and Family.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 15.—Thanksgiving services for the escape of the members of the imperial family when the yacht Standart ran on a reef in the Gulf of Finland, were held in St. Isaac's cathedral this afternoon. Similar services are to be held in the provincial towns tomorrow.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15.—The county grand jury today returned indictments against the Illinois Central and Yazoo & Mississippi Valley railroads for issuing passes to persons not entitled to them in accordance with a law that has been on the statute books of the state since 1884.

MACHINISTS AID STRIKERS

Vote $10,000 for Benefit of Erie Railroad Employes—Graft Charges to Be Investigated.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 15.—The convention of the International Association of Machinists voted $10,000 today for the benefit of the Erie railroad strikers. In discussing the matter President James O'Connell declared he intended to fight harder to win the Erie strike than he has ever done. He said he resented the written charge by General Manager Stewart of the Erie road, that $50,000 had been paid for immunity from strikes and that no strikes were called while the money was paid. Some of the $50,000 was paid and they want to know who got this money and declare they will not rest until graft charges are thoroughly probed.

TWO KILLED AT TELLURIDE

One Man Electrocuted and One Hit by Rock.

TELLURIDE, Colo., Sept. 15.—Milton O. Guyart, an expressman, was electrocuted yesterday while riding horseback across Wilson mesa, by coming in contact with a power line which runs from the Ames generating station to the Silver Lick mill and carries 10,000 volts.

The man was riding along a pass by the side of the line and where it crosses the crest of a little hill, the spot at which Guyart was killed, is only three or four feet from the ground. The victim had been engaged for years in the express business here.

While passing through an underground working of the Tomboy mine on his way to begin work this morning, Emil Northy, a miner, was instantly killed. His partner, who was following a short distance behind him, stumbled over the dead body, and for some time there were some doubts as to how he came to his death, but after an examination it was found that a rock had fallen from the roof of the tunnel, striking him on the head. Northy was 40 years old and unmarried.

The Story of a Medicine.

Its name—"Golden Medical Discovery"—was suggested by one of its most important and valuable ingredients—Golden Seal root.

Nearly forty years ago, Dr. Pierce discovered that he could, by the use of pure, triple refined glycerine, aided by a certain degree of constantly maintained heat and with the aid of apparatus and appliances designed for that purpose, extract from our most valuable native medicinal roots their curative properties much better than by the use of alcohol, so generally employed. So the now world-famed "Golden Medical Discovery," for the cure of weak stomach, indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, or biliousness and kindred derangements was first made, as it ever since has been, without a particle of alcohol in its make-up.

A glance at the full list of its ingredients, printed on every bottle-wrapper, will show that it is made from the most valuable medicinal roots found growing in our American forests. All these ingredients have received the strongest endorsement from the leading medical experts, teachers and writers on Materia Medica who recommend them as the very best remedies for the diseases for which "Golden Medical Discovery" is advised.

A little book of these endorsements has been compiled by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., and will be mailed free to any one asking same by postal card, or letter addressed to the Doctor as above. From these endorsements, copied from standard medical books of all the different schools of practice, it will be found that the ingredients composing the "Golden Medical Discovery" are advised not only for the cure of the above mentioned diseases, but also for the cure of all catarrhal, bronchial and throat affections, accompanied with catarrhal discharges, hoarseness, sore throat, lingering coughs, and all those wasting affections which, if not promptly and properly treated are liable to terminate in consumption. Take Dr. Pierce's Discovery in time and persevere in its use until you give it a fair trial and it is not likely to disappoint. Too much must not be expected of it. It will not perform miracles. It will not cure consumption in its advanced stages. No medicine will. It will cure the affections that lead up to consumption, if taken in time.

WALL STREET CONVALESCENT.

IT IS pleasant to note that Wall Street has decided not to die of the "panic," but to recover from its recent terrible illness and lead a life of activity, if not of usefulness. For several weeks Wall Street has been a pretty sick patient, but in the very beginning expert practitioners diagnosed its illness as more of the imagination than of the body. The victim simply persuaded itself that it was suffering from an aggravated case of impending panic, and this rendered it wholly unnecessary for the malady to be real. So long as the apparition was there what difference did it make whether it was real or imaginary?

A few days ago Mr. Harriman, who has contributed his share toward unsettling conditions by predicting disaster because the Administration is trying to stop some of his peculiar financial practices, returned from a trip through the West, where he found to his astonishment that the entire region was quite prosperous. This was a revelation to Mr. Harriman who had become so saturated with the pale gray gloom of Wall Street that he thought the whole country must be in desperate straits. But since his visit to the West he sees a ray of hope. Paul Morton, President of the Equitable Assurance Society, and J. P. Morgan have also expressed their belief that there is no probability of a panic or of depression in values. A. B. Stickney, President of the Chicago Great Western railroad, returned from Europe the other day and told the reporters that he is not at all worried because Wall Street has had to sell a few of its automobiles. He says that foreigners have not lost their faith in America, but regard the financial flurry "as simply a Yankee antic to put stocks up and knock them down again."

Finally, to complete the reassuring work, New York city sold a forty-million-dollar-bond issue the other day, and it was more than four times oversubscribed. These bonds draw 4½ per cent interest. Several weeks ago they were offered at 4 per cent and the sale fell flat. This was because at that figure they were less desirable as an investment than many other equally safe securities which could be had at the same price, but the pessimists got wildly excited and blamed it on to the Administration—about as absurd a thing as it would be to hold the Administration responsible for Wellman's failure to reach the Pole in an airship. The eagerness of investors to secure this bond issue at the increased rate of interest shows that money is not nearly so scarce as the panic forecasters would have us believe. It is a good thing all around, for the New York city government, which borrowed the money, feels better; the people who bought bonds feel better over making a good investment, and best of all, the palpitating pulse of Wall Street has been restored to a more normal calm.

A NATION OF LANDLUBBERS.

IN THE beginning of the dispatch announcing the completion of the Lusitania's record-breaking trip across the Atlantic the other day it was noted that this event occurred almost an exact century after the first trip on the Hudson of Fulton's Clermont. Then followed lengthy descriptions of what has been done by the British, the Germans and the French in the lowering of ocean records, with scant mention of the small part played by Americans. The Cunard Company, a British concern, has almost always been foremost in the passenger traffic between Europe and America, but a few years ago the two big German lines, the Hamburg-American and the North German Lloyd, came conspicuously to the front. The French line operates several fast boats, notably La Provence, but the part played by Americans has been small indeed. It is true that for awhile two vessels of the American line, the St. Paul and the City of Paris, held speed records, but they were soon outclassed, and though still in service, are no longer regarded as "ocean greyhounds."

It was by no means a full century after the invention of the steamboat by an American before the stars and stripes had begun to vanish from the high seas. As a factor in the world's sea trade the United States has been slipping backward for many years, almost since the close of the war, and now this vast carrying trade, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars per annum is almost exclusively in the hands of foreigners. Every year we pay foreign steamship companies something like $200,000,000 to transport our freight and passengers to and from our own ports, and this condition is steadily growing worse—that is the number of vessels flying the American flag is steadily getting smaller. Only a few months ago the only American line of vessels operating between this country and South Pacific ports withdraw from service and sold its boats because it could not successfully compete with the subsidized foreign lines. There is no fast steamship line to South America, and the quickest way to get from New York to Rio Janeiro, Buenos Ayres or any other port on the Atlantic side of that continent is by way of England or France. A few weeks ago the Postoffice Department let a contract to a British steamship line to carry South American mail from New York via Liverpool. At the present rate it will not be many years before the American flag will cease to float over a single vessel engaged in transoceanic trade.

The reason for this condition is the failure of Congress to provide adequate shipping laws. The word subsidy is repugnant to most Americans, but it is perfectly clear that we must come to that or else be content to see an end to our pretensions as a maritime power. Great Britain, Germany, France, Japan and every other maritime nation in the world, subsidizes its foreign shipping, and if the United States is to compete for even a small share of this profitable trade it must adopt the same policy.

MUTILATION OF TREES BY THE STREET RAILWAY CO.

THE complaint of the mutilation of trees by the street railway company which was made to the Council a few days ago brings up a matter which should be attended to without further delay. The company has been engaged in this form of vandalism for a long time, and as a result some of the finest shade trees in the city, particularly on the West Side, along Colorado Avenue, have been butchered until their symmetry and beauty is entirely destroyed. Whenever this eminent philanthropic concern finds that the branches of a tree are growing too close to its precious wires it sends a tree butcher out to lop them off, and the job is done in a clumsy, bungling fashion, utterly disregardful of the amount of damage it causes. The only thing the street railway company cares about is to clear the way for its wires, and if a valuable tree is killed, or made so unsightly that it would better be removed, it is all one and the same to the tree butchers.

This practice is in direct violation of a city ordinance and the company is liable for damages for the harm it does. The trees which line our streets are of inestimable value; they are the result of thirty-five years of effort to beautify the city and enhance its attractiveness as a place of residence. The taxpayers have spent large sums of money to construct and maintain an irrigation system to provide water for them, and now that they have attained such size as to constitute the chiefest beauty of the streets, they must not be mutilated and destroyed by a concern which, having secured the free privilege of carrying on its business in the streets, cares nothing for them except what it can make out of them. It would be well for the Council to serve summary notice on the street railway company that its vandalism must be stopped at once, and if this warning is not sufficient it should be prosecuted.

SOUVENIR POSTAL CARDS GOOD TEACHERS.

From the New York Sun.

The picture or souvenir postal card is probably doing more to make the world known to the untraveled than all the geographies and gazetteers. There is scarcely a village anywhere in the domain of the postal union that has not had its picture taken for a postal card impression in black or white or in colors, and thus its humble fame has been carried over seas and introduced to the four corners of the Union.

THE NATURE FAKERS.

From the Baltimore American.

President Roosevelt has shaken his big stick at the nature faker generally. He has intimated that they indulge in undiluted prevarications, and he has picked out several gentlemen whom he has elected to place in a class for special chastisement. It has been an interesting spectacle, and while some of our cherished beliefs have been rudely shaken—for instance, it will be impossible to ever again enjoy the story of the "cow that jumped over the moon," and the "little dog" that laughed—there is no doubt that the quarrel has been really entertaining.

A "HEAVEN-BORN DIVORCE."

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

We have no patience whatever with the socialistic, communistic free-love ideas of poets and others who suddenly discover that they have married the wrong woman and seek to get a divorce on the ground that they have found a new heaven-born affinity. The case arousing so much attention just now in the newspapers is one in point, but the novel feature is that the wife is quite ready to get the divorce and is on the best of terms with her rival, who is to take her place as soon as the bonds are severed. All talk some balderdash about love being foreordained from the beginning of the world and matches being made in heaven and that sort of thing. These folks are either completely deceived or are trying to deceive themselves, and there will pretty soon be a rude awakening and the sooner the better.

CORPORATIONS AND THE PUBLIC.

From the Kansas City Times.

"The time has passed for the corporations to ignore the public and the public interest," said Judge E. H. Gary, board chairman of the United States Steel corporation, in New York, yesterday. This comment was made with reference to the forthcoming report of the commission appointed some time ago to investigate the quality of steel rails used in track construction. It has been charged that the steel trust and other American concerns have been turning out imperfect rails, and the charge comes from men formerly connected with the steel business. If this charge is true, it is a serious reflection on the steel industry of this country. But Judge Gray seems to look with confidence on the report of the investigating commission.

But whatever that report may say or whatever the reforms it may lead to, Judge Gary is right when he says that the big corporations can no longer afford to ignore the public and its interests. The demand for consistently safe railway operation is only one of the imperative dictums of the time, and it is up to the railroads to put the blame where it belongs if it does not belong to them. But the men of the steel trust should understand that the people not only demand good material at the hands of the manufacturers, but also fair prices. They will not much longer tolerate a high tariff on steel and iron products, when these excesses merely serve to make abnormally rich those who are in the steel combine. The people know that no matter who pays for these manufactures first hand, the cost comes out of the public in the end.

TELL CONSUMPTIVES THE TRUTH.

From the Boston Transcript.

It appears from the experience already available that almost all the incipient cases may be saved, but that an almost clean sweep is made by death among the advanced cases. Hence the tremendous importance of an early diagnosis of suspected cases. "Treatment is never begun too early," says Dr. Pratt; "it is often begun too late." To let a man continue at work after the diagnosis of an active pulmonary tuberculosis has been made is as foolish as it would be to let a fire burn unchecked until it became serious before calling the fire department."

He attributes this dangerous policy to the consumptive's lack of knowledge of his condition in many cases, but in most the lack of financial resources for giving up work, and taking the rest and outdoor treatment. It shows how deeply and devotedly the doctors are going into this work of cutting out for us the "Great White Plague" at its sources that they have worked out the argument on the economic side of the problem in cases like these.

"I try to impress upon the sick man," says Dr. Pratt, "that the disease has its clutches upon him. Soon his strength will begin to fail and within a few months in all probability he will be too ill and weak to work. Then he will tax the resources of his family to the utmost. Often someone who might be earning money must remain at home to care for him. In addition to the expenses of his illness there is the increased financial burden attending death and burial. After the breadwinner is dead, provision must be made for the wife and children, not for months, but for years. It is cheaper for the consumptive to get well than to die. This plain speaking may seem brutal, but it is often the means of saving life. It is a line of argument that rarely fails with the relatives. If they refuse to loan money, we have been able to secure from other sources the necessary funds to enable the patient to take the treatment."

A FEW POINTERS FOR CHICAGO.

From the Indianapolis News.

One cannot imagine New York or London, or Paris, or any of the old and established cities gloating in such wise over increase of population. Such knowledge brings to them increase of sorrow, for they realize the responsibility that it means. The differences in the cases show that Chicago is really not yet a city—only the raw material of a city. For all its bulk and sprawling aggregation, it is a country town. Nothing in the increase of opportunity. A city, normally, is a center of civilization. It generates and makes possible the forces of civilization that without it are not possible. From the beginning, the influences that have shaped the history of mankind have come from cities. Has anything of this kind come out of Chicago? Laying aside its commercial power, which is prodigious, we doubt if any of the finer influences have radiated from Chicago that makes cities a beneficence, that constitute them centers of civilization whose example lifts up the region round about and helps forward the age. We are not lecturing Chicago, nor are we bringing against it railing accusation. We know of the good men and women there, tireless in their duty, and of the living forces that work to make head against evil conditions. But they have not done enough and are hardly more than voices crying in the wilderness. Chicago needs a great awakening of civic virtue if it is ever to become not simply a big but a great city.

Today's Horoscope

Monday, September 16, 1907.

"Crush anger with an iron hand this day.
Calamity will follow on its way."

This is the 259th day of the year. Moon is 9 days old, south of the equator this day and runs low. Mercury leaves the sign of Virgo and enters Libra, where Venus will join on the 21st.

Today has omens neither auspicious nor threatening, save only in one aspect. There is a warning against the red hand of quarrel. Beware how you let sudden passions rise this day. What might be but a passing dispute at any other time, may easily achieve proportions today that may mar your whole life. Anger is under a bright red sign. There is danger, dire and portentous, in it from dawn to midnight.

A good day for all routine business affairs. Consider any new or unusual matters cautiously.

For those of blonde or reddish complexion there is danger from above between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. Let them beware of heavy articles that are being hoisted.

Those whose birthdate this is should be prepared for a serious complication in business. If it catches them unawares, losses will follow. They must maintain a cool judgment and beware of worry, for they are threatened with illness as a result of it. It is unnecessary if they will be forearmed.

The child born today will be extremely unsettled and restless in disposition, but can be cured of this defect by being compelled to strict application to study early in life. Good success in business will then follow. If a girl, she will marry young. Her husband will become wealthy late in life.

OVER THE HILLS AND FAR AWAY

Over the hills and far away,
A little boy steals from his morning play
And under the blossoming apple tree
He lies and he dreams of the things to be—
Of battles fought and of victories won,
Of wrongs overthrown and great things done—
Of the valor that he shall prove some day,
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away—

Over the hills and far away
It's oh, for the toil of the livelong day!
But it matteredh not to the soul aflame
With a love for riches and power and fame—
Oh, O man! while the sun is high—
Up to the certain joys that lie
Yonder, where blooeth the noon of day,
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
An old man lingers at close of day;
Now that his journey is almost done,
His battles fought and his victories won—
The old-time honesty and truth,
The thoughtfulness and the friends of youth,
Home and mother—where are they?
Over the hills and far away!
Over the hills and far away!

PLANT JEWELS.

Investigations by the Fish Commissioner of Minute Forms of Plant Life.

The United States National Museum has just published a report on the diatoms, known as the jewels of the plant world, dredged from the ooze bottom of the Pacific by the fish commissioner steamer "Albatross" in her annual cruises in search of scientific and other material. The title of the volume is "Report on the Diatoms of the Albatross Voyages in the Pacific Ocean, 1888-1904," by Dr. Albert Mann, a collaborator with the museum in biological investigations. From the great mass of material, grotesque fishes caught far down in the sea, peculiarly shaped animals brought for the first time to the light of day, and plants of sorts unknown to botanists, Dr. Mann has singled out diatoms as especially worthy of a report, both from a scientific and from a general point of view. In the report are described myriads of tiny growths, many of them invisible to the naked eye, but which, placed under a microscope, appear marvels of symmetry and color.

These midget plants, some covering a pin point, and a few giants rivaling a pin head, although found everywhere under rocks, in rivers, along the sea shore, in lakes, in the gulf of Mexico, or the Arctic ocean, have received comparatively little systematic study from botanists. And this is true in spite of the fact, rarely known, that they are now on the market as polishing powders, sold either as "tripoli" or, mixed with soap, under some fancy name, that one widely-known brand of tooth powder is composed entirely of diatom shells, that they are employed as a substitute for asbestos in most its uses, and that at least indirectly they form a not inconsiderable part of the world's food supply. Among the more abject inhabitants of Lapland and Bohemia, says Dr. Mann, they are actually used as an adulterant for food. Under the name of "berg mehl," earth rich in diatoms is mixed with flour, fat, etc., and eaten. Commenting upon this Dr. Mann says:

"It is hardly supposable that this fossil earth contains any appreciable amount of nourishment. The philosophy of the practice is probably the fact that where a hungry man has a stomach capacity of two quarts and a food supply of only a pint, he can cajole himself and gain a sense of plethoric bounty by adding three pints of inert matter to his supply—a sort of square meal, it is true, but a very hollow one."

Food for Mollusks.

In connection with the general food value of diatoms, he says:

"The diatoms do, however, form a considerable part of the world's food supply, at least in an indirect way; for they are one of the principal sources of nourishment for mollusks, that is, clams and oysters, whose stomachs always contain large quantities of these plants, as well as constituting a good part of the food of small fishes and of the animal organisms on which larger fish feed. Thus they are a sort of primary source of organic food, on the abundance of which many of our most valued food products depend.

"These quotations are taken from a descriptive pamphlet on diatoms published a couple of years ago by the Smithsonian Institute, which now has especial present interest in connection with the Albatross dredgings.

"It is not so much the industrial value, however, of these little-known plant jewels that presents them to investigators, as the unique place they occupy in the biological world. Researches have recently been conducted into their value in determining the origin of sea-bottoms and the direction and extent of the currents which carry them.

"But just what is a diatom? Standard works describe it as one of a family of 'minute unicellular Algae having a siliceous covering of great delicacy, each individual multiplying by spontaneous division.' That is perfectly true. In other words, it is a very tiny water plant with a protecting case of sparkling glass-like substance. To appreciate its beauty one must put it under a microscope. Then, enlarged from 25 to 600 diameters, it appears a glistening jewel of a rare order.

"Although diatoms, when examined closely, are shown to be constructed not very artistically like the lid and bottom of a paste-board box, they still have not been neglected in their finish. "Indeed it may safely be stated," says Dr. Mann, "that there is hardly a kind of surface ornamentation known that has not been utilized in beautifying these structures. Polished beads of varying sizes arranged in radiating or concentric rows, shining bars, wavy ridges, delicate watch-case milling, hexagonal network, the interspaces of which are often further ornamented with secondary sculpture, intricate arabesque designs, in short a diversity and delicacy of embellishment that makes these plants the most ornate of all living objects." And none of them larger than a pin-head.

Multiply by Division.

A study of their life in the water has revealed the fact that they feed upon inorganic substances in solution in the water about them. Their food must have sunlight and therefore subterranean streams and the deeper parts of the sea are forbidden them while they are alive.

They are able to multiply merely by a single plant splitting down the middle and forming two plants, which in turn, after a little development and separate nourishment, split again.

Some diatoms grow fixed to the bottom or to other plants, but there are large numbers of them which move about from place to place in the water. Their motion, for a long time, puzzled biologists and botanists. It is now generally conceded, however, that these tiny plants creep about by themselves. Some investigators have gone so far as to say that they swim, but they are found helpless and inert if not in contact with some fixed substance.

"There will be no difficulty for anyone interested in the examination of these plants in finding them," says Dr. Mann, "either as living or as fossil forms. Wherever there is a brown coloration of the surface of the mud, submerged stones, or twigs, not a red-yellow, which is due to iron, but a brown-yellow to almost black, there are diatoms in abundance. It is their characteristic color when found in masses; and a little of the material placed under the microscope will reveal thousands of them. Or if fossil material is needed, diatomaceous earth can be found in almost every state in the Union and almost every land on earth."

Dr. Albert Mann, it may be said, is the only American investigator on record as having made a thorough study of these plant jewels.

WILSON ON FORESTS

Reforestation Is Now a Great Problem—Some Difficulties Presented by Fire Protection.

From the Washington Cor. Boston Transcript.

Secretary Wilson, whose tenure of the agriculture portfolio extends back into the McKinley administration, has just returned to Washington from a tour of some of the western states, bringing with him an optimism as to the future that no direful predictions of hard times from Wall Street or other business centers can daunt. He traveled through the intermountain states to the Pacific coast, and spent some time in the central western states. Everything looks good to him, with only a few small spots on the horizon. The secretary paid particular attention to the matter of the forest reserve question, and made personal investigation in several of the reserves. "The government has, roughly, about 150,000,000 acres of forest reserve," he said. "With regard to them I found two chief problems:

"First, to insure protection from fire, and second, to reforest the land where continual fires have destroyed the young trees. There are millions of acres growing nothing except a little grass. The question of reforestation is pressing. The price of lumber indicates that we are up against a wood famine. Lumber is being shipped from the northwest all over the world. A great deal of it is even coming here to the east. Common lumber costs $30 a thousand when it gets a patent under the timber and stone act often sells to private corporations, some of which have as many as 30,000,000 acres and are still buying. Considerable pressure comes from persons who want to get title merely to sell to such companies and put the money in their pockets.

"The mines will be the first place where the scarcity will pinch. This is due to the fact that large timbers are used in the mines, and this class of timber will be the first to be exhausted and the hardest to produce again. The call of the east upon the Pacific coast will be shut off temporarily by an added $3 a thousand which the railroads are contemplating putting on the transportation charge. When the Panama canal is completed, however, cheap transportation will be again established to the east, and the demand will reappear. The difficulty of getting timber will increase gradually but surely, and in the face of the present demand it would be hard to say how severe the conditions will be ten, twenty or thirty years hence.

"Vast quantities of timber are being wantonly destroyed every year. This destruction takes place on lands which are privately owned, and is due in large part to the fact that when the big timber is cut the branches are left to dry and become a fire trap. Then when a fire is started it devastates great stretches of land, killing all the young timber, and in many instances leaving an absolute desert behind it. Large lumber companies which formerly did the same thing in Michigan have gone west and bought great tracts of land, and when the big timber has been harvested they have taken no further interest in the lands, and have allowed the fires to destroy the forests of the future. These lands are privately owned, and there is no way of restraining a man from doing as he pleases with his own property.

"All that I can see that promises timber for the future is that section that is protected by the national forest reserve. On these lands certain mature timber is allowed to be cut, and all waste is disposed of in such a manner as to prevent fire. There will be certain amounts of timber maturing every year which may be cut, and this will go on indefinitely. Fire destroyed $76,000 worth of timber on the whole of the forest reserves last year, while the figures of the lumber people show that more than $350,000 damage was done by fire in the state of Washington alone. Congress has refused to allow the president to put more lands in the reserve, and the position of the department is merely that of protecting the timber it already has under its care.

"I failed to find much sentiment against the reserves, except from the small element that would like to get possession to sell. In the heavily timbered regions of the northwest it is not very practicable to make a farm. It would cost about $100 an acre to get the land cleared for cultivation. The general sentiment is that the president's policy is wise, since it is evident that wood is going to be very scarce in this country before many years.

"There was very little feeling regarding the grazing in the reserves. It is desirable to have the grass eaten short so that it will not feed fires. The policy of the government is to take care of the settler who has a limited amount of land, and to let him put in a few head of cattle for nothing, charging him for the rest about 20 per cent of the value of the forage eaten by his cattle.

"The people of the west are not fearful of hard times or of a panic. They believe that good times are ahead, and they have reason for their belief. The west is prosperous and is going to continue so. There is plenty of money out there. In fact the west is lending money to the east instead of the east furnishing money for the west. And the western lenders are getting good rates of interest for their loans. You don't find the people out there worrying about Wall Street and its troubles. They are too busy to pay attention to such stories. They hardly ever know that any such troubles exist, except as they occasionally read about them in the newspapers. But these predictions of calamity that they read do not bother them. They have gotten over caring such a lot what Wall Street thinks or what happens to it.

PERPETUAL MOTION MACHINE.

David Unlapon, a full-blooded native of the northern territory, Australia, who combines a genius for mathematics with a passion for music, claims to have invented a machine which will secure perpetual motion. He is now in Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, seeking the means of testing the feasibility of his mechanism. He explains that the forces which he proposes to use are gravitation and momentum and he had come to Adelaide to secure the assistance of the aborigines department in procuring four beveled wheels, a spindle, a tube and so on. He is confident that when he gets these requisites he can put together a machine that will bring perpetual motion appreciably nearer.

GEORGE ELIOT'S CHILDHOOD HOME

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Americans who admire George Eliot have flocked in such large numbers to her old home in Nuneaton to view Croff house, where she spent her childhood, that the Warwickshire authorities have decided to charge a fee of 12 cents a head to visitors in the future. The county uses the building as a public school, and no particular notice was taken of the casual American or English visitors. But of late the house has been a place on the regular route of the American visitor, and it is now worth the while to make a charge for admission.

TRUSTEES MEET TODAY

MEMORIAL ADDITION MAY BE ERECTED SOON.

Many Matters of Importance in Connection With Printers Home Will Be Considered.

Plans for building the Cummings memorial addition to the Union Printers home will probably be completed at the annual meeting of the trustees of the home, which will begin in the institution at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. The sessions will probably last all week, and many matters of importance, together with several routine affairs, will be taken up.

President James M. Lynch and Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Bramwood of the International Typographical union, both of Indianapolis, Ind., are members of the board ex-officio. Mr. Lynch is also chairman and Mr. Bramwood secretary of the board of trustees. The other members are Thomas McCaffery of this city, vice president of the board; L. C. Shepard, Grand Rapids, Mich.; William J. White, San Francisco; Thomas Crowley, New York, and T. D. Pennessey, Los Angeles. George P. Nichols of Baltimore, Md., agent for the home, will also be here.

Mr. White arrived in this city from San Francisco last night, and the others are expected this morning.

WILL OFFER 40 ACRES

WOODMEN LIKELY TO ACCEPT AND BUILD HOME HERE.

Chamber of Commerce Has Proposal Under Consideration—Means Much to Springs.

Prominent citizens of Colorado Springs, it is understood, will join with the Chamber of Commerce and other commercial organization of this city, in purchasing a site of 40 acres, to be offered to the Modern Woodmen of America as a site for the national home which that order will build.

The resolution drawn by the committee from Colorado Springs lodge No. 7,226, M. W. A., provides for the donation of a 40 acre site for this purpose. This resolution was submitted to the Chamber of Commerce for consideration, and although the details of the communication are withheld, pending final action by both that body and the Modern Woodmen, it is known that the principal request in the resolution is for a site of 40 acres.

The Chamber of Commerce and the other organizations will agree to the proposition, it is understood, provided the proper assistance can be secured from the business interests of Colorado Springs in purchasing the site, which will cost from $15,000 to $20,000. In the event that the proposal is accepted, it must then be taken to the head camp of the Modern Woodmen for approval, but since the resolution was drawn by the local committee after conferring with three of the head camp directors, it is a foregone conclusion that acceptance by the Chamber of Commerce will practically close the deal.

In addition to the site to be secured free, the Modern Woodmen will purchase additional land for dairy and farming purposes, and a neat sum will be expended in that direction, provided the home comes to this city, in addition to the cost of the building, which will be between $100,000 and $200,000.

CONCERT SEASON AT AN END

Colorado Midland Band Plays Farewell Numbers to Largest Crowd of Summer.

The band concert season in Colorado Springs is over for this year. The Colorado Midland band, which has played to appreciative thousands in this city, Stratton park and Manitou since its opening performance last June, gave its two last concerts in Stratton park yesterday afternoon and evening.

Despite the fact that many of the tourists have left Colorado Springs, yesterday's performances were attended by the largest crowds of the year. Residents of the Pike's Peak region, reluctant to see the close of the concert season, thronged Stratton park yesterday to hear the last concert. The various numbers were encored to the echo.

CASTELLO OPPOSES MOVEMENT

Can See No Reason for Dissolving Mining Exchange Is in a Prosperous Condition.

President F. F. Castello of the Colorado Springs Mining Stock exchange is strenuously opposed to the proposed dissolution of the organization, and is apparently supported by the older and more influential members of the exchange. The Gazette's announcement of the movement in yesterday morning's issue caused much speculation in mining circles of this city as to the outcome of the scheme. The sentiment in both mining and general business circles is almost universally in favor of a continuance of the exchange.

Mr. Castello said last night:

"The Mining exchange is self-supporting. It needs no aid, and is built on a solid, substantial basis. There is absolutely no reason, so far as I can see, for its dissolution. We have had temporary stock depressions like the present one many times before, and have weathered the slump when we were not nearly so prosperous or on such a sound foundation as at present.

"If the exchange were a drag on anyone or owed a large sum of money and was going deeper in debt, the question of its discontinuance would then be feasible, but with its splendid assets, consisting of cash and a good business property, the proposition is absurd."

Personal Mention

Mrs. J. C. Dunnavan of 721 East Boulder street has returned to this city after a 10 days' visit with relatives in Victor.

Deane of Lynn, Mass., mother of Mrs. Kinney, arrived in Manitou from Denver in an automobile yesterday noon, stopping at the Montezuma sanitarium. The party will leave today for Glenwood Springs, where Drs. Freeman and Kinney will attend the annual convention of the State Medical association.

TRAMP'S FOOT CUT OFF

SCREAMS ATTRACT ATTENTION OF PASSENGERS.

Victim Placed in Baggage Car and Taken to Pueblo—Displays Wonderful Nerve.

With his right foot completely severed from the leg, an unknown tramp, thought to be from Easton, Pa., rode from Florence to within 10 miles of Pueblo, a distance of about 22 miles, under a passenger coach of Rio Grande train No. 2, eastbound, yesterday afternoon. Molding to the brake beams for his life, the sufferer was helpless to extricate himself from his perilous position. His screams were at first taken by the passengers of the coach to be the cries of hilarious persons in the adjoining car, and no attention was paid to the noise. As the train passed an unusually smooth stretch of roadbed, the cries of the victim became clearer, and one of the passengers, pulling the bell rope, stopped the train about 10 miles the other side of Pueblo.

Taken to Hospital.

The man was found, faintly moaning, and almost unconscious with pain, hanging limply to the beams under the car. William J. White of San Francisco, who was a passenger en route to this city to attend the annual meeting of the Printers Home trustees, of which he is a member, bound a handkerchief around the sufferer's leg in the form of a tourniquet, so as to stop the flow of blood. The man was placed in the baggage car and on reaching Pueblo was taken in charge by the assistant division superintendent of the Rio Grande road. He was removed to St. Mary's hospital in that city, where his leg was amputated below the knee.

Before being taken to the hospital, the sufferer requested Mr. White to notify Jim Whelan, 713 Washington street, Easton, Pa., of the accident. Mr. White reached this city on No. 2 about 8 o'clock last night, several hours late. He said:

Was Stealing a Ride.

"I never saw such an exhibition of gameness as displayed by that poor fellow. He must have been suffering untold tortures yet he expressed his appreciation of what little we were able to do for him, and remained conscious until taken to the hospital. He was stealing a ride evidently from one of the western towns of the state to Denver, and his foot became entangled under the wheels shortly after we left Florence. Not one man in a hundred could have retained his grip on the beams after such an awful accident. The foot was cut off clean at the ankle, as though severed with a knife. The poor fellow must have ridden for over 20 miles in that condition. He was suffering so much that no one asked his name."

There was nothing on the person of the injured man to disclose his identity.

ELKS TO ENTERTAIN TONIGHT

Extensive Preparations Have Been Made for First Social Session of the Season.

Colorado Springs Elks will give the first social session of the season at the clubhouse tonight, beginning at 8 o'clock. Tickets, which entitle each member of the lodge to bring one guest who is not a member, have been issued, and preparations are being made to entertain several hundred men.

The Colorado Midland band, which closed the summer concert season yesterday, has been invited, and will play a number of popular airs. The Elks band will also attend, and the two organizations will join in playing several numbers. Other features of the evening will be special vaudeville stunts by members of the lodge, and a lunch, which will be served at 11 o'clock.

Elks are anxiously looking forward to the regular monthly dances given during the fall and winter at the clubhouse. It is the plan to give the first of these dances on October 10.

A FREE-FOR-ALL FIGHT

Four Men and Two Women, All Colored, Under Arrest.

As a result of a free-for-all fight on South Sierra Madre street, near the Rio Grande yards, about 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning, in which revolvers, bricks and divers other implements of warfare were used, the police, after working until noon, arrested the entire crowd involved, consisting of four men and two women. None was injured in the melee, although Sam Matthews, one of the prisoners, took a couple of shots with his revolver at H. J. Goodrich, whom he accused of hitting him over the head with "sumpin' mighty hard." The others arrested are S. M. Brown, John Shelby, Mary Holmes and Georgia Robinson. The men were placed in the city jail and the two women are being held in the county jail pending trial. Matthews and Goodrich will probably be charged with assault, and perhaps assault to kill, while the others will be arraigned on charges of drunkeness and disturbance.

Goodrich and the Robinson woman have been living in a shack on South Sierra Madre street. The others live at Roswell, where the men are employed at the coal chutes. Matthews, Brown, Shelby and Mary Holmes visited Goodrich and Georgia Robinson Saturday night, and began quarreling. The visitors, accompanied by Goodrich and the Robinson woman, started to the Rio Grande railroad yards where the Roswell people intended to board a switch engine for a ride home, and the trouble broke out afresh on the way.

Hearing the shots, the south-end policemen immediately telephoned to police headquarters and the patrol wagon, manned with three or four patrolmen, was sent to the scene. Four of the prisoners were arrested within a short time, and the fifth was captured an hour later, but Matthews, who did the shooting, was at large until about noon yesterday, when he was arrested by Detective John Fulton.

RICH VANADIUM STRIKE

SPRINGS MEN JUBILANT AS RESULT OF FIND.

Great Excitement in Magdalena Mining District in Socorro County, New Mexico.

Colorado Springs men interested in the Copper Ridge Mining and Development company, which is operating property in the Magdalena district, Socorro county, New Mexico, are jubilant as a result of news of a new and unexpected strike, which may develop into tremendous proportions. In addition to satisfactory values in copper and zinc leads, large deposits of vanadium, a rare element of the nitrogen-phosphorus group, extremely valuable for manufacturing purposes, have just been found on the company's property.

The company owns 12 claims in the heart of the Magdalena district, surrounded by properties which have produced millions of dollars worth of copper and zinc. Prominent among these is the Graphic mine, controlled by a Joplin, Mo., syndicate. The Kelley, Mistletoe, Top Top, Black Rock and other bonanzas are in the same section. The Bonbrights and other well-known mining men of this city are also interested in the Magdalena district.

Great Excitement.

The Copper Ridge company has been working on copper and zinc leads, which returned values ranging from $20 to $30 per ton, practically from grass roots. The cause of the recent excitement in the camp, and among the Colorado Springs men interested, is the discovery of large vanadium deposits, running clear through the Copper Ridge territory and adjoining property. Claims are being located for miles in every direction by prospectors, and excitement is intense.

Vanadium is used principally in hardening steel, and sells for approximately $5 per pound. It usually runs from $200 to $700 per ton in the crude ore. The Motor World, a periodical devoted to automobiling, says of vanadium:

Value of Vanadium.

"Chief among the claims for vanadium steel as being particularly adaptable for use in automobile construction, is the fact that it stands up under the alternating impacts and stresses much better than other steels available for the same service. In the past it has been customary to test steels only by subjecting them to steady load applied in one direction, or to a slow bending action. But it has been found that many steels which behave splendidly when the load is applied in one direction are quick to give way when it is applied alternately one way and then the other."

Vanadium steel has been found to be from four to 40 times as strong as any other known steel, so that the commercial value of the raw article is easily seen.

Those Interested.

The Copper Ridge company is capitalized for $500,000, and is a close corporation, the stock being held by a few persons who have invested their own capital in the property. Following are those most largely interested: Charles Pelta, Colorado Springs, president; J. G. Brown, Colorado Springs, vice president; George Keith, Magdalena, secretary; George P. Hopkins, Magdalena, treasurer; Louis Pelta and Frank F. Wulff, Colorado Springs, and Charles W. Felter, Clear Creek county.

FACTS ABOUT MRS. GARDNER

Though Wealthy, She Led Life So Retired That She Was Known Only by a Few.

Although the widow of a member of the firm of Gardner Brothers, the largest firebrick, tile and gas retort manufacturers in the United States, and herself the owner of the famous firebrick plant at Lockport, near Pittsburg, Pa., the late Jane Hogg Gardner, who died recently in this city, leaving about $150,000 to relatives, churches and charitable institutions, led a life so retired that she was practically unknown, both in the east and in Colorado Springs, where she lived for nearly 10 years.

The Gazette yesterday morning printed a special from Pittsburg to the New York Times, commenting on the speculation in Pittsburg as to the identity of the dead philanthropist. A prominent physician of this city has given the following facts concerning Mrs. Gardner to The Gazette, which are of interest in view of her many large bequests:

Mrs. Gardner was the widow of the late William Gardner, who, with his brother, James Gardner, owned the Lockport, Pa., and Mount Savage, Md., firebrick plants. The Lockport factory turned out the gas retort placed in the famous Le Moyne crematory in Pittsburg, said to have been the first crematory constructed in the United States. The Colorado Springs physician, who is distantly related to the Gardners, when a boy crawled into the big retort as soon as it was cool and was the first person to enter it.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner and their son, James, came to Colorado Springs from Shadyside, a suburb of Pittsburg, about 1897. Mr. Gardner died of pneumonia shortly afterward, and the son, for whose health the family came here, died several years later.

Alone and practically unknown, performing innumerable charities quietly and many times anonymously, Mrs. Gardner continued to live in Colorado Springs. She lived at 1428 North Nevada avenue up to the time of her death.

The United Presbyterian church of this city was bequeathed $1,000 in Mrs. Gardner's will. The bulk of the estate was left in scholarships to educational institutions, in memory of her children and husband, and to churches and charitable institutions in Pennsylvania.

FIND NEW GOLD FIELD

RICH STRIKES REPORTED FROM WINNEMUCCA.

Many Prospectors Visit Scene of Operations and Make Locations. Ancient Gold Field.

WINNEMUCCA, Nev., Sept. 15.—The strike of gold ore in the Silver State range on the group of claims owned by W. T. Critchfield, J. J. Shaw and the Kotelman brothers, is the present mining sensation of Winnemucca.

Samples of the rich gold ore brought in by the owners of the original strike were placed on exhibition. An interesting part of the exhibit is a gold pan with a goodly string of yellow colors, the result of a panning of half a pound of the ore. The ore and the pannings showed for themselves and the result was that several parties went out to the scene of the strike to look over the ground and make locations, if possible.

Though the strike was made several weeks ago, the original claim owners have had very little to say of it, preferring that no excitement should be caused until they had time to perfect their locations, which has now been done. But, nevertheless, quite a number of prospectors have visited the strike and many locations close in have been made.

The scene of the strike is about 25 miles northwest of Winnemucca in the Silver State range of mountains. Years ago silver mines were worked in that vicinity and a number of shipments of rich ore were made; but operations ceased with the decline in value of the white metal. The finding of an arastre by Messrs. Critchfield and Shaw near where they uncovered the rich gold ore shows also that years ago there was some attempt at gold mining in that section. It must have been long ago, for no one hereabouts has any recollection of gold having been found in any quantity in that part of the country. But there is no doubt that the present find is an important one. The ledges are large and well defined and the pannings and assays prove that the ore carries the precious yellow stuff.

The district, as yet unnamed, has all the earmarks of developing another rich gold camp. Should this be the case, it will mean much for Winnemucca, this place being the nearest railroad point.

CHICAGO MEN INVEST

DEAL MADE AT GEORGETOWN INVOLVING $130,000.

Will Mean the Development of Red Oak Property and Several Others.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., Sept. 15.—It is believed that the holdings of the Red Oak Mining and Milling company are to pass over to a syndicate of Chicago capitalists for a consideration of $130,000, most of which is to be paid in cash. W. E. Swartz, a mining expert of Chicago, who made an examination of the property, is said to have reported favorably. This is the deal that was announced as being closed over a year ago, a payment having been made, but owing to the purchasers becoming interested in a property in old Mexico the privileges were given up. Mr. Swartz, who made the examination, informed your correspondent at the time of his visit that he was confident that the Sunburst, Astor and Scepter mines could again be entered among the list of steady and heavy shippers with the expenditure of the necessary amount of capital. At the same time a Mr. Goetz, who is heavily interested, stated that no trouble would be experienced in securing ample capital and that work would be put under way on or before October 1. It is the intention of the purchasers to clean out and timber all the old stope and drifts in the Astor workings, at which time exploitation of the virgin ground will be undertaken. The Astor mine has never been worked to a depth exceeding 240 feet, and at the same time a production in excess of $1,000 has been made. Mr. Goetz stated that it was the purpose of the buyers to continue putting through the raise which is destined to connect the Sunburst tunnel with the Scepter. By completing this important piece of work all the ores found in the Astor and Sunburst workings would find an outlet on the Georgetown side of Democrat mountain. The old aerial tramway is to be repaired and will run direct to the base of the mountain, where the proposed concentrating plant is to be located.

RICH COPPER MINES OPENED

Discovery Made of Immense Bodies on Knights Island in Alaska Territory.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 14.—Some of the most extensive copper mines thus far discovered in Alaska-American territory are being opened and operated on Knights island, Prince William sound. This island is 32 miles long by 8 miles wide and contains mountains of copper ore, much of which runs from $45 to $60 a ton, according to C. S. Carter, a former resident of Colorado, who has interests there, the vein on the property of the Prince William Copper company, in which he is a stockholder, is 200 feet wide, extending from the level of the sound to the apex of the mountain, which is 2,000 feet in height. [illegible] they take advantage of the recession to extract what ore they can, pending the return of the tide. This mineral, several fine assays of which he exhibited, runs 50 per cent. The company is opening up the mine and expects to be shipping by April 1, 1908. The ore is conveyed in vessels to the Tacoma smelters at a cost of $2.50 a ton. Mr. Carter, who has been in that country for the last 11 years, considers Knight and contiguous islands the richest copper country in the world.

The Hubbard-Elliott company of Chicago has acquired very extensive holdings, having lately purchased, in addition, the Dickey claims at Land Locked bay and the Reynolds-Alaska Development company's property at Boulder bay for $1,000,000 cash. These properties are all to be called the Prince William Sound Amalgamated Copper company. The Hubbard-Elliott people have struck a 38-foot vein of copper ore in their Empire group. The Guggenheims also are very extensively interested in the mines of that region.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

AN ERRING GREAT MAN'S PUNISHMENT

The International Sunday School Lesson for September 22 is "The Death of Moses." Deut. 34:1-12.

By William T. Ellis

The often that sin is not sin in a great man is one of the most dangerous fallacies of the times. Of late it has received many severe jolts, and voices are everywhere being raised for the punishment of the richest and most powerful lawbreakers. It has recently come out that two noted prisoners of the American government have been only nominally such; they have lived in comfortable apartments, instead of in common cells, they have been permitted to go driving daily, to attend baseball games, and to have free intercourse with their friends. A notorious murderer in a New York jail is permitted to purchase many special privileges by his wealth.

This is commendable and true justice, of course. Yet this sort of thing, which is now coming to the light as never before, marks all lands and all ages. The rich and the powerful have not been held rigidly to account, as have the poor and the weak. Man's law is inequitable; human justice is not blind. A well-known English weekly has long maintained a column of parallel citations of the inequalities of current administration of the law. All these flagrant violations of the spirit of justice are being resented today as never before, because of the world's keener sense of right.

A Law-Giver's Offense.

At this particular moment it is wholesome and opportune that such a large percentage of English-speaking people, especially of those of teachable years, should be called to consider a Sunday school lesson dealing with the sin of the greatest figure in the world's history prior to the beginning of the Christian era, and admittedly one of the greatest characters of all time. Moses was the deliverer of Israel from Egypt. He was the leader who brought it up to the borders of its promised land. His teaching shaped the national character. Upon the laws which he formulated most of the civil codes of Christendom are today based. In sheer greatness Moses towers a Mt. Everest.

But he had sinned; and in punishment he was kept out of the promised land. The complaining of the children of Israel had angered him, so that he smote the rock at Meribah twice, in heat and with scornful speech, when bidden by Jehovah to draw water for the thirsty. As the one hundred and third psalm has it,

"They angered him also at the waters of Meribah
So that it went ill with Moses for their sakes;
Because they were rebellious against his spirit
And he spake unadvisedly with his lips."

The great commentator, Alexander Maclaren, touching upon the exclusion of Moses from Canaan for an exhibition of hasty temper, well observes: "People say, 'A heavy penalty for a small offense.' Yes; but an offense of Moses could not be a small offense. 'Noblesse oblige.' The higher a man rises in communion with God and the more glorious the message and office which are put into his hands, the more intolerable in him is the slightest deflection from the lowest level. A splash of mud, that would never be seen on a navvy's clothes, stains the white satin of a bride or the embroidered garment of a noble. And so a little sin done by a lottily endowed and inspired man ceases to be small."

Trouble From the Tongue.

The loosely-wagging tongues that are causing half the world's misery should be admonished by this tragic story. It was simply for speaking unadvisedly with his lips that Moses was punished. One would be false to the needs of the times who failed to stress right here. The tongue is the most wicked member of the body. It commits more crimes, and worse, than the mailed fist. The pistols and daggers do not inflict the injury upon humankind that is wrought by idle and malicious tongues.

Mr. Respectability excuses his fits of temper with their harsh speech, as merely this way. That "way" shut Moses out of the promised land. Mrs. Society thinks it clever to say cruel things about her neighbors; there is more malice in polished drawing-room gossip than in gack-fence billingsgate. Both wreck lives and break hearts. Mean words, suspicious words, gossiping words, may all properly be ex- gossip from the mountain top whence Moses looked, with longing vision, upon the land which his feet would never press, all because he indulged a moment's anger and hot speech. What a suggestion of the Canaans out of which we are all kept by the offenses of that unruly evil!

The Passing of a Great Man.

The newspapers a death-roll of the mighty seems to have been tragically long of late. Many editorials, anent the recent death of two patriarchial southern members of the United States senate, have pictured the nobility of a long life lived for the service of one's country. The passing of such makes a peculiarly strong appeal to the imagination. More than once I have heard a certain editor of a great daily say that to his mind, the most pathetic figure in history is this man Moses, who, having licked those miserable beggars of Israelites into something like shape as a nation, and having borne all their burdens, should within sight of the goal have to lie down alone and die.

Always awe-inspiring, death became mysteriously sublime in the case of Moses. He had been a lonely man all his life—lonely amid a multitude. To the last he walked a solitary way, as is the lot of all great souls. Now, his lips still warm with a farewell song to the people for whom he had spent his life, and his counsels and exhortations for their welfare still echoing in the air, he vigorously breasted the heights of Mt. Nebo, for "his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated"; that he might, alone with the God with whom he had so often communed on the mountain top, catch a vision of the long-desired land of promise, and then lie down to the rest which he had so well merited.

A Grave Without a Tomb.

As recent events show, the laborer is often permitted to see the results of his toil before closing his eyes forever. Five years ago it seemed as if the men and women, who in earnestness and in lofty devotion to high ideals, had fought against the evils of the modern business trusts would remain to the end merely the objects of the jeering scorn of the rich and powerful. Now, behold, they live to see the corporation magnates cowering beneath the impending stroke of justice. Those of us who are still young well remember when the "temperance crank" was fair game for everybody's sport, and political prohibition, for neighborhoods and states, regarded as the mere phantasies of disordered minds. Today the prohibition of the liquor traffic is a foremost political issue in many sections of North America, with the liquor forces avowedly scared and on the run.

Yes; some men enter the Canaans that once seemed far far away. Even Moses, despite his sin, was permitted to look upon the goodly land toward which he had steadfastly led a host. The worst of the way was over; attainment was now sure. His eyes saw victory; therefore they could close in peace.

"Others shall sing the song,
Others shall right the wrong,
Finish what I begin,
And all I fail of, win."

The east is the land of graves. The worship of ancestors is the cult of most of the people who dwell therein. The dead seem to have more rights than the living. God knew that if the tomb of Moses should be known, the man who had so often been cursed in life would be worshiped when dead. So, as the simple narrative runs, "Moses, the servant of Jehovah, died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of Jehovah." And he buried him in the valley in the land of Moab over against Beth-peor; but no man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day."

The well-known poem of Mrs. Alexander, for which readers of newspapers frequently inquire, depicts the incident graphically:

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave.
And no man knows that sepulcher,
And no man saw it e'er.
For the angels of God upturned the sod
And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth;
But no man heard the trampling
Or saw the train go forth;
Noiselessly as the daylight
Comes back when night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
Grows into the great sun.

But when the warrior dieth,
His comrades in the war,
With arms reversed and muffled drum,
Follow his funeral car;
They show the banners taken,
They tell his battles won,
And after him lead his masterless steed,
While peals the minute gun.

This was the truest warrior
That ever buckled sword,
This the most gifted poet
That ever breathed a word;
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen,
On the deathless page, truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men.

And had he not high honor—
The hillside for a pall,
To lie in state while angels wait,
With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock-pines like tossing plumes
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand, in that lonely land,
To lay him in the grave?

In that strange grave without a name
Whence his uncoffined clay
Shall break again, O wondrous thought,
Before the judgment day,
And stand with glory wrapt around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life
With the incarnate Son of God.

O lonely grave in Moab's land!
O dark Beth-Peor's hill!
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
And teach them to be still.
God hath his mysteries of grace,
Ways that we cannot tell;
He hides them deep, like the hidden sleep
Of him he loved so well.

SUPREME POWER

Terse Comments on the Uniform Prayer Meeting Topic of the Young People's Society Christian Endeavor, Baptist Young People's Union, Epworth League, etc., for September 22. "God's Omnipotence." 1 Chron. 29:9-13.

By William T. Ellis

Calmness comes from a contemplation of the almightiness of Jehovah. "The Lord reigneth."

"God's in his heaven—all's right with the world."

No other truth can impart quietness and confidence to a worker for humanity's betterment like this one of the omnipotence of the Infinite. In the end, God will have his way. And his way is man's welfare.

He who opposes the locomotive's progress may quail before its power; but he who rides in the train may rejoice in that power.

All of a Christian's power is imparted power.

Hitch your wagon to a star, cried Emerson. Better than that figurative exhortation is the plain advice to link your life to the life of God, becoming a partaker of the divine energy. That way lies conquest. They prevail who are strengthened by the might of Omnipotence. Barriers have been falling for centuries before the Christian church, simply because the mysterious power of God has been in her. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," cried the apostle.

A child goes driving with his father, and pleads to hold the reins. He is permitted to do so—above where the father's hand grips them. The real guidance and control is with the father. As little children we chafe and fret to be given free rein over the world within and without; but we are safe only when we let the hand of Omnipotence control.

The power of the father is the protection and peace of the child.

A year ago in Japan I talked with her statesmen, editors, soldiers and other public men upon the question, "Will Japan become a Christian nation?" The answer of all, save except the few Christians, was unequivocally that Japan would never become a Christian nation. Viewing the subject upon a purely national basis, and after considering the visible evidence, they were justified in this conclusion. On the other hand, a fuller investigation of the subject, especially in the light of the strength and purpose of the Japanese Christians, leads to the conclusion that Japan will become a Christian nation. The factor that the statesmen and public men ignore is God. The supernatural element is first to be reckoned with. Because God in his omnipotence is manifestly in the Japanese church, it will yet conquer its heathen environment.

One of the marvels of grace is that God's omnipotence permits itself to be linked to man's impotence.

"The misery of life," says F. B. Meyer, "will not be to be in the hand of God, but to be outside the hand of God."

Every reformer has his days of discouragement. He is cast down at the slow progress, or apparent defeat, of the cause he serves. He is tempted often to surrender all. Then it is that he needs to plant his feet firmly on the vast, abstract truths of God and justice.

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win.
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

All the omnipotence of the Infinite is pledged to the support and ultimate victory of servants of truth. As Browning puts it,

"I trust in God—the right shall be right,
And other than the wrong, while he endures."

In all the universe there is only one force that even dares to defy the omnipotence of God. That is the human will, to which he has given the power to resist his power. Only that sign and seal of man's divinity—his freedom of will to make choice between good and evil—is able to say to Jehovah, "I will not." The plants beneath our feet, the wind that blows in our faces, the stars that shine above our heads, all these are implicitly obedient to the omnipotent Ruler. Man is the only rebel.

And I smiled to think God's greatness
flowed around our incompleteness,
Round our restlessness his rest.
—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Once every summer for fifteen years past an outdoor service for gypsies, including the baptism of children, has been conducted near Toledo, O., by Rev. T. N. Barkdull, a Protestant Episcopal rector.

Sunday afternoon open-air services have been conducted all summer on the grounds of the cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C. The bishop of London will address one of these September 29, on the occasion of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew convention.

Twenty millionaires were included in the 60 laymen who constituted the prayer meeting last November, in which the present laymen's missionary movement was born.

The annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church are this fall voting upon a proposition to reduce the size of the general conference, which now, since laymen have equal representation, numbers about one thousand.

The Australian Presbyterian church is considering the placing of a time limit upon pastorates, the scheme which the American Methodist Episcopal church has of recent years abandoned. The Australian plan provides for five-year assignments, with a maximum extension to seven years. Charges paying a salary of over $1,250 would be exempt from the time limit.

A memorial window to John Harvard, founder of Harvard college, was unveiled some time ago in the Southwark cathedral, England, in the chapel of which he was baptized. This past summer the chapel has been restored through a fund of $12,500 given by Harvard graduates and friends. In removing the old boarding of the chapel a perfect Norman arch was uncovered.

The village population of India has increased one and one-half per cent in ten years, but the percentage of increase of native Christians is thirty per cent.

One of the foremost Baptists in the world is Rev. F. B. Meyer of London. At the recent Northfield conference he made a remarkable deliverance upon the long-controverted subject of baptism, declaring "Dipping or sprinkling doesn't matter. The heart is what counts in baptism, not the formal expression."

SEVEN SENTENCE SERMONS

I find the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand, as in what direction we are going.—O. W. Holmes.

Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversation.—Franklin.

Know then this truth enough for man to know,
Virtue alone is happiness below.—Pope.

It is not what stays in our memories, but what has passed into our character that is the possession of our lives.—Phillips Brooks.

The tendency to persevere, to persist in spite of hindrances, discouragements, and impossibilities, it is this that in all things distinguishes the strong soul from the weak.—Carlyle.

The key of yesterday
I threw away,
And now, too late,
Before tomorrow's close-locked gate
Helpless I stand—in vain to pray!
In vain to sorrow!
Only the key of yesterday
Unlocks tomorrow!—Anon.

There is no place where so much hard work can be put in with such small visible results as in the perfecting of character; therefore, have patience, my soul.—Anon.

TO SETTLE THAT GREAT QUESTION

From Harper's Weekly:

In a north of England town recently a company of local amateurs produced "Hamlet," and the following account of the proceedings appeared in the local paper next morning:

"Last night all the fashionables and elite of our town gathered to witness a performance of 'Hamlet' at the town hall. There has been considerable discussion in the press as to whether the play was written by Shakespeare or Bacon. All doubt can now be set at rest. Let their graves be opened; the one who turned over last night is the author."
